ANNE HIRST
Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: Maybe that distracted wife who wrote you about her wayward husband who had got himself into a mess, can use the tactics I did in similar circumstances. A year ago I heard mine was dashing about with a pretty girl who was boasting she intended to marry him. I decided that all she needed was a good scare. I gave it to her!

"She was a young thing who had been sneaking out to meet him. I called her and told her if she ever saw my husband again I would tell her mother. She burst into tears and hung up — but she never met him again. Later, my husband admitted he had it coming to him, and ever since he has been wonderful.

"These single girls may not be aware of the trouble they cause, but why don't they realize that what they are doing is downright dishonest? Wait till they get married — what nags they will turn out to be, how suspicious!

"If you married women want to hold on to your men and put these young gadabouts in their place, tell your husband you absolutely refuse to divorce him, and stick to it — as you yourself, Anne Hirst, have advised.

"Remember the first years of your marriage, and keep yourself as dainty and attractive; give your husband all the attention and flattery and articulate affection you did then. Go out with him whenever and wherever he asks you to, be his gay companion, and for heaven's sake hold on to your sense of humour.

"In other words, be HIS GIRL. Then he'll never leave you.

HAPPY AGAIN"

* No man who is satisfied at home searches elsewhere for emotional adventures. He may succumb to a momentary infatuation, but it ends as swiftly as it began, and the smart wife files the escapade away with other insignificant faults. She knows her husband loves her, and she will not dignify an occasional flirtation by making it an issue.

* Meantime, she proves every-day to her man that she regards him as the head of the house around whom all her hopes and affections orient. She makes herself the center of his existence. He knows it, and relaxes.

* Every wife has the obligation to "stay as sweet as she is" to the man she married. As you express it, to "be his girl," consistently and intelligently. So she holds him in a content too satisfying to risk.

* The thrill of clandestine meetings often appeals to a romantic adolescent, but she is stupid indeed if she does not see the situation as the dangerous temptation it is. You acted promptly, and told the girl off in words she could understand. You quenched the affair before it blazed into flame. Congratulations!

ADOLESCENT PROBLEM

"Dear Anne Hirst: I am a young man 19, and for a long time I've liked a girl three years younger. Our friends kid us all the time and she never denies anything, but I know it makes her self-conscious. I just have to guess how much she likes me.

"I date a few other girls just so our friends will not guess that I like her best. What is the best thing to do until she shows how she feels about me? . . . Thank you for your column. I know you've kept me out of trouble more than once.

JOE"

* Your girl is young and still on the shy side, so you are wise not to rush her. Show her that you, too, can laugh off your friends' teasing; it will lessen her embarrassment.

* Stay with the group for a while longer, until she matures and gains more confidence.

LOVE IN A SHELTER — Mr. and Mrs. Melvin M. Mininson are the U.S. nation's first bomb-shelter honeymooners. Mininson, 28, and his bride, Maria Rodriquez, 27, of Tampa. Fla., peer into the hatch of their 14x8x7.foot steel and concrete bower in Miami. They hope to spend two weeks in it to publicize shelters and civil defense. If they stick it out, they get a second honeymoon in Jamaica from sponsors of the stunt.

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM
by Gwendoline P. Clarke

Every woman loves to change things around in her home once in awhile. Every man likes things left just the way they always have been. So, if any changes are to be made the woman has to be very diplomatic, making the operation as painless as possible to the man of the house. We have just come through such a period — with very satisfactory results.

When we first moved into our present home Partner and I took the front bedroom for ourselves. The second bedroom was our guest room. For it we bought honey-maple twin beds. The room was light and airy and looked very comfortable. The third room was mostly den, with a roll-away cot for convenience. It is generally called "mother's room" because I make the most use of it — for typing, sewing and reading.

Our first visitors here were my sister and her adult son. So there we were with two good beds but only one guest room. We made up a bed for Klemi in the basement. Other visitors followed — sometimes a husband and wife, or a mother with children, or sometimes a single guest. Our guest room seemed quite adequate. I didn't realize we were actually short of accommodation — not until this spring when we were again faced with mother and son complications, worse than the first time as we had given away our basement bed and the roll-away cot was too narrow for adult comfort.

What to do, that was the question. I would lie awake at night pondering the situation I finally came up with an answer. It was then, and not 'til then, that I broached the subject to Partner. In theory the solution was quite simple but involved unwelcome changes and a lot of unnecessary work — that is, from a man's point of view. After expounding on the idea for about a week I finally got Partner to see the light. So . . . last Wednesday was moving day

We turned the small room into a spare room with only one bed plus the roll-away cot. The middle room became the den in which we left one of the twin beds. Sounds simple, doesn't it? But you don't know what is in that den! My drop-leaf typewriter table, for instance. Solid oak so big and awkward it had to be taken apart to be moved at all And then the table-top was too wide to go around corners into the middle room. It was then I decided an ordinary low table would answer my purpose for typing if only I could keep the self-locking desk drawers. Partner investigated; found the desk well-made with screws and wooden pegs and so was easily taken apart, leaving the drawers intact.

Well, what with books, papers, filing cabinet and other things—plus cleaning — it took us a whole day to make the move

And now even Partner thinks it was a good idea. As a guest room we like the smaller room better — cosy and more compact. The den is spacious, with better lighting and can double as a sleeping area for male visitors. And do you know, the change-over was made without a single swear-word from Partner. As for me I was so tired I couldn't sleep that night. Comments from other interested parties — "I wonder you didn't think of it before!"

That, as I have said, took place on Wednesday. Thursday the fun began outside. Township equipment moved in for laying water mains. Shovels, graders, pipe-lifters and a gang of men were soon noisily at work. Our driveway was excavated and a piece of road torn up in front of it so pipes could be angled across to the other side. Just as the job had reached the stage of shutting us in a piece of equipment broke down and work was postponed until next day. But somehow I had to get out to take a neighbour and her child to the clinic. Their driveway was clear so Partner filled in the ditch between our two properties and I drove across both lawns and on to the road. You couldn't see where I had been the ground was so hard and dry.

Friday, while pipe-laying construction was still deafeningly in progress in front of us, a gas station at the back of us, facing the Dundas Highway, staged an official two-day opening with loud-speaker music blaring away from ten in the morning until nine at night. It was terrific

Sunday was relatively quiet, except for an occasional lawn mower. Where anyone could find grass to cut I wouldn't know. We still haven't had any rain to speak of. Last Monday we were in Dufferin county. It was raining on the way up otherwise conditions were just as dry as here.

Dee and her boys are enjoying themselves (I hope!) at the cottage. Art goes up week-ends, travelling mostly at night. One Sunday there was a terrific storm — hydro off three hours. Supper was cooked on the Quebec heater. Rain so heavy you couldn't see the lake — only fifty yards away. They didn't need the rain but how we would have welcomed it!

Yesterday Bob, Joy and boys were here. Today all is quiet on the home front. We are not sorry.

Big Narcotics Suspects Trapped

It was 1 a.m. and sultry in the Montreal suburb of Pointe aux Trembles; at the garish Motel Jacques Cartier, a convoy of cars pulled up and let out a band of big, quietly dressed men. A balding, pudgy motel guest cursed fervently as the introducers burst in, then submitted to a frisk. Other visitors took on his roommate, a younger, more imposing man, who put up a fight before subsiding. R.C.M.P. raiders thus climaxed a four-year investigation (carried out with U.S. narcotics agents) by the arrest of Montreal Hoodlum Giuseppe ("Pepi") Cotroni, 39, and his lieutenant, René ("Bob") Robert, 33.

They were big fish, said Samuel Levine of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics in Manhattan. Cotroni ("He's illiterate, but his arithmetic is good") has been for years practically the biggest single supplier of dope to New York, although his normal channels of distribution were disrupted by the police investigation that followed the 1957 discovery of a gangland convention at Apalachin, N.Y. Cotroni, whose enterprises include an interest in a flashy Montreal drive-in café called The Bonfire, got the dope off Montreal-bound ships, and provided probably four-fifths of the New York supply of heroin.

Nine U.S. undercover agents moved into Montreal four months ago after a New York stoolie arranged for a personal introduction to Cotroni. After weeks of credential checking by Cotroni, one agent managed, in two deals to buy 13.2 lbs of uncut heroin. The dope was delivered in six plastic bags, each weighing 1 kilo — 2.2 lbs. Price was $35,000 (in U.S. currency), $14,000 due by July 15. If Cotroni was worried about the credit, he should not have been. The money was supplied fifty-fifty by Canada and the U.S. All told, said the Mounties, investigators had taken possession of heroin worth up to $8,000,000 at retail.

Cotroni and Robert have led vivid lives. A pal of Cotroni's slipped some poison in his creme de menthe last winter, but Cotroni had his stomach pumped out and was as bad as new. Somebody shot Robert in the stomach as he stood outside a Montreal nightclub last April, but he got patched up. Cotroni and his sidekick were indicted in Chicago in June for a role in a scheme to dispose of bonds stolen in the $10 million heist of the Brockville Trust & Savings Co. and were at large pending extradition. —From TIME

by Roberta Lee

Q. When approaching a revolving door with a woman, does the man enter first so as to push the door for her, or should she precede him?

A. He allows the woman to go ahead of him and, in fact, he is better able to control the revolving door if she does go first.

Q. When one is at a banquet and doesn't care to drink coffee, is it proper to turn one's cup over as a signal to the waiter?

A. No. It is better to indicate the fact by a slight shake of your head and a "No, thank you" to the waiter as he is about to serve you.

In Madison, Wis., the state bureau of personnel advertised for an inspector for the beverage and cigarette division of the state tax department: "Young man with ability to drink moderately on the job when the occasion demands."

Ottawa Payroll Keeps Growing

In the submission of the Executive Council to the Senate Finance Committee with respect to the Threat of Inflation reference was made to the fact that the Federal Government had 195,390 on the public payroll in 1958, a jump of 10,000 over 1957. In the ten years since 1948 the number of people on the Ottawa payroll increased by 62,000 or nearly 53%. In the twenty years since 1938 the increase has been 136,000 or 309%. This compares with our population growth since 1938 of 55%. During the last twenty years, in peace and war, good times and bad, Ottawa has added to the public payroll an average of 6,800 every year.

Mr. Fox, the President of the St. Lawrence Corporation Limited, put these figures together for his address to the Annual Meeting of Shareholders last Spring. It is worth mentioning that all these figures are for ordinary government departments only. They do not include armed services, government agencies or Crown corporations such as C.B.C. In 1958 C.B.C. alone had 6,3000 employees and took $41 million out of taxes for its capital costs and operating deficit.

The July 4th issue of Maclean's Magazine comments that the three levels of government in Canada today employed 618,000 men and women — more than three times the size of the labour force in the entire iron and steel products industry, the country's largest manufacturing group. This represents more than 10% of the total labor force in Canada. The cost of this machinery, according to the article in question, is $200 million a month.

The fact that our Civil Service is growing at such an astonishing rate is a matter for very serious consideration. Every added cent of bureaucratic cost adds that much to the cost of production. We in Canada, because of our considerable dependence on foreign trade, must be particularly cost conscious. Canadian growth depends upon our ability to develop larger domestic and foreign markets. — From The Canadian Chamber of Commerce, News Letter.

Swollen Head Is A Serious Malady

Was this the top-rated amateur tennis player in the world? Playing a listless game from the baseline and continually double faulting, Wimbleton champion Alex Olmedo went down to a straight-set defeat at the hands of lesser-ranking Abe Segal of South Africa in the national clay-court tennis tournament in Chicago. As the Davis Cup champion stalked from the court, the fans booed and tournament officials banned him from participating in the upcoming doubles matches "in the interest of better tennis." Olmedo said later that he had been "mentally tired" but admitted: "I did not play as hard as I could. Next week I will apologize to Segal personally and in public." But, he added angrily: "It is human to make mistakes but the officials had no right to boo. The officials themselves were running by the court booing. That made me more mad."

Guns Can Be Fun —Also Deadly!

Vacationists can have a lot of fun and improve their shotgun marksmanship, too, with a hand-trap, a carton of "clay" targets, a couple of boxes of shells and the favourite shotgun. With this outfit every type of game can be simulated. Here again, as always in shooting, be sure of your background. There may be a picnicking party on the other side of the hill.

No matter what type of shooting iron you take along on your vacation this year, bear in mind these firearm safety regulations. They are simple easy-to-follow and right to the point.

Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun.

Carry only unloaded guns into your automobile, boat, camp or home.

Always carry your gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble.

Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.

Never point a gun at anything you do not want too shoot.

Never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.

Never climb a tree or fence with a loaded gun.

Never shoot at a flat, hard surface or the surface of water.

Now is the time when bus windows that wouldn't close all winter can't be opened.

Dangerous Job For Amateurs

Much of the early progress in rocketry came from inspired amateurs who sometimes blew themselves up — along with an occasional bystander — in the interests of science. But now the professional descendants of the pioneers think the day of the amateur is over, are appalled at the risky stunts of rocket buffs from 16 to 60. So serious is the situation that the American Rocket Society has issued a 76-page booklet cataloguing the dangers and advising the amateur to stop. Said A.R.S.: "All practical means must be taken to prevent the manufacture of propellants or rockets by amateurs."

Rockets get their zip by means of a restrained explosion; the rapidly burning propellant must generate hot gases at precisely the right pressure. If the pressure is too low, the rocket does not fly; too high, and it bursts like a bomb. Very slight defects or miscalculations can raise the pressure to the danger point. The rocket can explode if the nozzle is a few thousandths of an inch too small. A solid propellant may crack, sharply increasing the burning rate. Unburned propellant can block the nozzle, or flame can burn a hole in the thin casing. As any Cape Canaveral man knows, not even the pros can anticipate all possible ways for the rocket's restrained explosion to become unrestrained. Their motto: "Always assume that a rocket will explode."

Mixing propellants from drug-store or agricultural chemicals is just as perilous. A.R.S. entrusts its members with a long list of dangerous combinations, urges that the list be kept secret so that youthful amateurs will not get any new ideas. Particularly touchy are propellants that must be mixed hot. Another bad actor, already well known to most kids: ordinary household match heads, which are apt to explode disastrously while being crammed into a makeshift rocket chamber.

At first, A.R.S. hoped to make hobby rocketry safe by expert supervision, asked scientists and military men to help the amateurs. But now it thinks rockets are best left alone altogether. The game has grown too big and too dangerous. All told, says A.R.S., some 10,000 amateurs are fiddling around with rockets today. During a sample six-week period, 162 of them were seriously injured. At that rate, a teen-age rocketeer has one chance in seven of getting hurt each year.

A New Dome For The Holy Rock

Under the hot shimmer of July in Jerusalem, a giant crane swung endlessly back and forth lifting new girders above an old shrine. The Dome of the Rock, at Jerusalem's eastern edge, was to have a new covering. Yet as riggers scrambled over the site, assembling the scaffolding and preparing huge aluminum beams for erection, a controversy raged over the project, with loud cries that one of the world's holiest spots was being defiled instead of restored.

This was the place where Abraham offered up his son Isaac as sacrifice, and was restrained by an angel of the Lord. Solomon is said to have used the rock as the foundation of his temple. Herod built there the temple from which Jesus drove the money - changers. Mohammed rested by the rock after his night flight from Mecca.

Sacred to Jews, Christians and Moslems alike, the rock has rarely lacked a noble covering. The present dome dates back to the great ediface erected by Abdul-Malek Ibn Marwan, Caliph of Damascus, in 691, who used up seven years' tax revenue from Egypt to realize his dream. In 1099, crusaders mounted a gold cross on the dome and turned it into a church. Later, Saladin won it back for Islam, lovingly coated the interior arches with mosaic, the walls with marble. Suleiman the Magnificent ordered the exterior walls covered with splendid blue tiles.

Time, earthquakes, and most recently, mortar shells, lobbed into the sanctuary during the Jerusalem fighting in 1948, all but ruined the ancient structure. Mosaics were smashed; the 11th century outer dome of wood and lead bulged, showing signs of collapse. As soon as peace returned to the Holy Land, the King of Jordan organized an emergency committee to restore the mosque.

Main problem facing the restorers was to find a substitute for the outer dome (the ornately decorated inner dome will remain in place). Their final answer was enough to make a sultan shudder: it is not gilt, or even gold-anodized aluminum shell (cost: $364,000). Too modern, cried some citizens; too ignoble, said others. "It will look like an ad for an orange drink," snapped one traditionalist. The builders pressed on with their work, hoping to have it finished this fall. Historians pointed out that the Caliph of Damascus had melted down 100,000 gold dinars to gild the original dome. The new aluminum one will look the same, and at a fraction of the price.
