AN OLD HEALTH GOSPEL.

(Ottawa Citizen)

In these days when new alleged cures for diseases are being brought forward it is well to remember that no real improvement has been made upon the old health gospel of sunshine and the open air. These two are the constituent elements for nature's health formula, upon which science itself has not been able to imprave. Science may work a cure for ill-health, but the secret of health itself is in the obedience of natural laws and the living of normal life. And since health is a bequest from the child to the man, the health question primarily concerns childhood. The child who lives largely in the open, with excerises that fill the lungs with fresh air and who sleeps by a window that is not closed to keep health out, has greater chances of sturdy life. Of all the modern calls back to the land, to simplicity, to nature, there is not one morerational than that which accepts as true and wise the gospel of sunshine and the open air. It becomes the chief purpose of modern society to see to it that the children of to-day shall be given the utmost chances to avail themselves of its truth and wisdom. Sunshine is better than serum, and a capital substitute for it.

VOTES AND HUSBANDS.

(Chicago Tribune)

Women suffrage is assailed from a new quarter. A German writer sees in it a "world peril." The militant suffragists, the writer declares, are losing sight of everything else but their "cause." The result is that a number of the leading advocates of votes for women have not exercised discretion in the choice of husbands. Despite their keenness as "politicians," they fell victims to the flattery of rakes.

This leads the writer to conclude, with a great deal of alarm, that women suffrage will put a premium on rakes. The alarm is wholly unnecessary. That a few zealous supporters of the suffrage movement have chosen unworthy husbands is as yet no sign that when women will have the ballot they will lose the sense of discrimination they now possess.

The ballot will raise the womap to a higher place economically and socially. The emancipated women will get better wages. She will work fewer hours and will be relieved of the indignities which she now suffers in industry. She will have more time for culture, for reading, and pleasure. This will aid rather than deteriorate the home.

Under present conditions women are not infrequently forced into uncongenial marriages because the man is a good provider; a sort of a meal ticket. When life for women will become easier she will not marry to escape intolerable conditions in factories and shops. There will be no more intolerable conditions for her than there will be for man. She will exercise greater independence and deliberation in the choice of a husband.

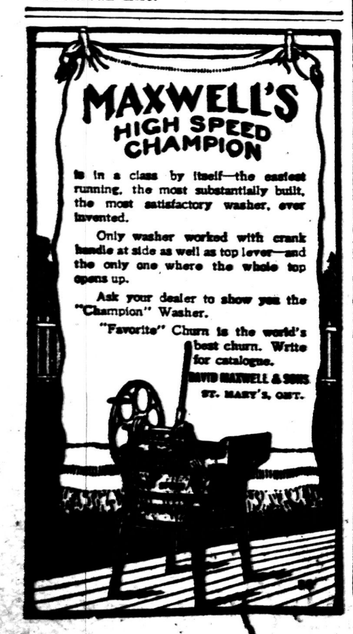
TO THAW OUT FROZEN PIPES.

It is no small catastrophe to have an exposed pipe in your house freeze, nor is the plumber's bill to be despised. The man of the house can easily do his own plumbing in this event, and at no cost.

Heat a fireless cooker stone rather hot and prop it against the pipe. There is no danger of fire if an asbestos lid is used to protect any woodwork near. In a few minutes the ice-plug is loosened. —Suburban Life.



KEPT HIS WORD.

Rubinstein After Death Revisited His Friend.

One wild and blustery night I found myself at dinner alone with Rubinstein, the weather being terrific even for St. Peterszurg. The winds were howling round the house, and Rubenstein, who liked to ask questions, inquired of me what they represented to my mind. I replied: "The moaning of lost souls." From this a theological discussion followed.

"There may be a future," he said.

"There is a future," I cried, "a great and beautiful future. If I die first I shall come to you and prove this."

He turned to me with great solemnity. "Good, Liloscha, that is a badgain; and I will come to you."

Six years later in Paris I woke one night with a cry of agony and despair ringing in my ears, such as I hope may never be duplicated in my lifetime. Rubinstein's face was close to mine, a countenance distorted by every phase of fear, despair, agony, remorse and anger. I started up, turned on all the lights, and stood for a moment shaking in every limb, till I put fear from me and decided that it was merely a dream. I had for the moment completely forgotten our compact. News is always late in Paris ,and it was Le Petit Journal published in the afternoon that had the first account of his sudden death.

Four years later, Teresa Carreno, who had just come from Russia and was touring America—I had met her in St. Petersburg frequently at Rubenstein's dinner table—told me that Rubinstein died with a cry of agony impossible of description. I knew then that even in death Rubinstein had kept. as he always did, his word.—Lillian Nichiam, in Harper's Weekly.

EVADING A FEUD.

How Kentucky Families Were Made Friends.

To aid parents and teachers in the selection of the best books for children to read, lectures are given at the public library with an exhibit of books. Addresses were made by George F. Bowerman, the librarian, and Miss Clara W. Herbert, the children's librarian.

"A good book for children," said Miss Herbert, "should have ethical value, vitality and interest, a hera worshipping-element for things and people that are admirable, simplicity of incident and lack of morbid introspection. The right book at the right time is important.

"To form a quick judgment as to the merits of a book when at the book counter, one may be guided a little by a consideration of the author's name and reputation, and also the reputation of the publisher. Something can be learned from the makeup of the book—cheap paper and cheap illustrations are apt to indicate a cheap book. If a book is one of information, the subject should be known to be of interest to children, and a brief glancing over the pages will give one an idea of whether the matter is handled in an interesting way."—Washington Star.

EASY DESSERTS.

Coffee Jelly —A jelly is always a pretty and a delicate addition to any menu. Often it can be made beforehand so that it will be ready to serve without trouble. To make coffee jelly, take 1-2 box of gelatine, soaked 1-2 hour in 1 cup of cold water. Then add 3 cups of boiling coffee. Cool in a mould. Serve with whipped cream and sugar.

Coffee Mousse.—Three-fourths of a cup of strong coffee, 1 cup of sugar and 1 pint of cream, yolks of 2 eggs. Beat the eggs and sugar together, and the coffee. Cook in a double boiler 4 minutes, stirring constantly. Cool, stirring frequently. Whip the cream, mix the custard with it and freeze without stirring.

Tapioca Cream—Four tablespoonfuls of tapioca soaked over night in 1 quart of milk. In the morning sweeten to taste and boil till it thickens—not too thick—stirring all the time. Beat the yolks and whites of 4 eggs separately. Stir in the yolks, then the whites, slowly. Flavor with vanilla. Serve cold.

Sanol and Sanol's Anti-Diabetes Effect Wonderful Cures.

Below is given a copy of a letter from a prominent Winnipeg Druggist. This is but typical of the many we receive advising of the great demand for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, and the many cures these sterling remedies effect:

The Sanol Manufacturing Co. ,
Winnipeg.

Dear Sirs:—

In regard to the sale of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES I might say I have been handling the goods for about three months I was obliged to put in SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES to supply one of my customers who now is completely cured and whom, I believe, has sent a testimonial to your Office. Another customer ordered SANOL and I was obliged to stock it. This gentleman was so well satisfied that he has sent bottles to his friends. Up to this time I have never really taken much interest in the preparations, but when customer after customer would come in and tell us about what SANOL had done for them I came to the conclusion it would be worth my while getting behind SANOL and recommending it to my customers. This I have done, and I have heard nothing but words of praise for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES. I am

Starvation is bringing some of the German worshipers of "protection" to a more reasonable frame of mind. Municipal meat shops have been opened for the sale of frozen meats—Australian mutton and Russian beef and pork—against the protest of packers and butchers. There has been no remission of tariff rates to sufficiently cheapen imported supplies; but the necessity for this municipal intervention is significantly demonstrated by official statistics just published, showing that the slaughter of pigs in Germany in the last quarter of 1912 was 140,000 less than in 1911; whereas the slaughter of horses for food was 9,000 more than in 1911—an increase of 33 per cent.—and the slaughter of dogs showed a 50 per cent. increase.

How to Conquer Rheumatism at Your Own Home

A CHERRY PARTY.

Strings of cherries decorate the room.

Alternate the cherries with green leaves.

Have small paper cherries of different colors.

Have them in two boxes, one for the men, the other for the ladies.

The gentleman and lady drawing cherries of the same color are partners.

Set all the guests to hunting for cherries, the partners keeping together.

The cherries (most of which are cut from pasteboard) are hidden in all manner of places.

Put large candy cherries here and there to stimulate the eagerness to find more.

Cut several large pasteboard cherries into quarters and award candied cherries to them who match them.

The partners who succeed in finding the most cherries should receive an appropriate award.

A "cherry pie" may adorn the supper table in which are embedded patriotic mottoes in cherry shape attached to ribbons.

The guests pull the ribbons and exchange the mottoes, the ribbon ends having been slipped through the red paper top of the pie.

PITCAIRN ISLAND.

Inhabitants Number 150; Total Wealth is $50.

The Pitcairn Islanders do not often have visitors, but recently the inhabitants of this romantic island were visited by Robert Hesketh, F. C. I. S., while on his way from Valparaiso to Sydney. On his return to modern civilization, Mr. Hesketh had some interesting things to say anent the life of this strange little colony.

The population now consists solely of Seventh Day Adventists and numbers 150 all told. They have a school and a church, and the schoolmaster is preacher as well as medical adviser. There are sixty-seven children under sixteen. The food of the islanders consists of sweet potatoes, a little corn, a few yams, pumpkins and tropical fruits. The total wealth of the islanders in English coin is about £10.

The government of the island is conducted by a chief magistrate-in-council, in internal committee, comprising the chief magistrate-in-council, two assessors, chairman of the internal committee and a government secretary. These positions are all honorary. All persons over eighteen years of age, whether male or female, have a vote, and each elector can cast five votes—one for each officer. The elections are held between Christmas and New Year.

Law cases involving a penalty of under £5 can be tried by the Chief Magistrate, but over this amount two assessors have to be associated with him. When a man is fined, there being little or no money on the island, he has to work it out by repairing the roads. The day's work is started and concluded with religious ceremony, and the majority of colonists retire at sundown.—London Evening Standard.

SUICIDE OR HEROISM?

(Woodstcok Sentinel Review)

Suppose a man to be afflicted by an incurable and contagious disease; supposing that realizing the burden he was to his wife and family or to his friends, and the danger of communicating his dicease to them, and knowing that there was no hope for him, he were to walk out of the house, not into a blizzard that meant certain death, but into a river where death would be just as certain as in the blizzard, would the world rise up and proclaim him a hero? Does the chorus of admiration with which the story of Capt. Oates has been received mean that in the estimation of the world a man is justified in sacrificing his life so that he may no longer be a drag on his friends? Or does it simply mean that the story reached the world in a dramatic form as to compel admiration without reference to any question of wisdom or ethics?

Sterilize Your Feathers.

Why not?
It's only common sense.
We're particular about our food.
Why let the rampant feather go free?
This tiresome feather penetrates our ears.
It threatens to put out our unoffending eyes.
It is run up our noses till we are crazed with the tickling.
And if we so far forget ourselves as to laugh or talk it is run down our throats.
The clean white brand-new feather isn't so bad, but the dark old-timer that has swabbed other throats is a menace.
So sterilize your feathers.

SUPPOSE THE CANADIANS—!

(Detroit Free Press)

Suppose when the soldiers from Fort Wayne are gone, and the barracks are empty, and the guardhouse is deserted, and there is no one to fire the brass cannon at sunrise and at snuset, and there is no guard to march up and down before the lodge gate, and no patrol for the parade ground, and no sentinel at the apex of the fortifications boardwalk, and no attendant at the denatured canteen—suppose on some dark and stormy night when the wind blows in fateful gusts from the east, and whistles through the empty embrasures, and mangles and twists the lonely flag pole, and the Sixteenth and Eighteenth wards shiver in their beds and pull the covers over their ears—suppose on such a night, the Canadians should come!

Suppose they should execute a flank movement in hollow square formation across the Detroit river, as Washington crossed the Delaware. Suppose they should storm the low banks of the fortress greensward, and with their trusty rifles and their drums and fifes should steal into the deserted precincts.

And suppose they should bring their fleet up the river from Amherstburg under cover of night and anchoring it stealthily should train its guns to command the colonel's noble brick residence on the northeast corner lot. What would happen then? Oh, wow! What would happen then? Already, each day, the Canadians cross our noble river in droves. They force their money on us, they buy our goods, they eat in our restaurants, they go to our theatres, they marry our sons and our daughters. They even settle down and live among us.

With only G. Oliver Frich and his deputy immigration inspectors to defend us on land, and Judge Whelan's steam launch to protect us afloat, to what perils are we exposed!

There'll be 10,000 troops on the Mexican frontier, but there'll be none at hand to protect us in Detroit if the Canadians come.

THE FOUNDATION OF BUSINESS

(Ottawa Free Press)

A young man in Ottawa, the owner of no property, and with but a moderate salary borrowed $400 recently from a bank in this city. On the same day as this transaction was put through, the same bank refused a similar loan to another citiden whose salary was considerably more, and who was the owner of some urban property. The explanation given was that the "moral" rest in the first instance, was so much better than on the second case, that it overbalanced the security that the owner of property gave. The bank preferred to trust a honest man without property, to trusting a doubtful character who had the means to pay, but who might endeavor to evade his obligations through some technicality.

This is true of all business, that character counts considerably more in finance or commerce, than careless and oftimes cynical statements would lead the public to believe.

SHOULD CARE FOR CRIPPLES.

(Stratford Beacon.)

It is proposed to prohibit cripples and other objects of pity who sell pencils, shoe laces, etc., on the streets from doing so in Detroit. The mayor is of the opinion that they are an eyesore to the others. He is about right. The spirit that animates some of them, to earn their own living, though they are placed at a disadvantage, is commendable. Others of them are simple beggars under a thin guise. The municipality should provide for those who are so crippled as to be unable to earn a livelihood.

13-STOREY SKYSCRAPERS.

(Philadelphia Record)

An insurance paper that has taken the trouble to make a census of the skyscrapers of Manhattan has made the curious discovery that notwithstanding the current superstition, buildings 13 storeys high are preferred to all others Thus there are 181 structures of 11 stories 191 of 12 stories, 389 of 13 stories, and 44 of 14 stories. From that figure the number rapidly declines. In all there are 1156 buildings that are 10 or or more stories in height. Doubtless there is some very excellent reasons why a building of 13 stories has the call over all other skyscrapers, but it is not set forth. Evidently the owner of tese structures are impervious to superstition.

TOO MANY RABBITS.

The Unknown Man Whom Australia Curses.

In the early days of Australian settlement—just when, nobody can say—some well-meaning emigrant sailed from old England, taking with him, among his most cherished possessions, a couple of pairs of rabbits, probably the pets of his children. The name of that pioneer is not chronicled in Australian history. He may have been a most worthy man—a man whose life and works in the country of his adoption might very well have earned for his memory the greatest respect and regard, but nothing he did or could have done would be sufficient to wipe out his terrible blunder. His name, whatever it may have been, is anathema; his memory is vile; his folly unforgivable.

This pioneer may have had the best intentions in the world. When Australians speak of him they admit that possibility, but in their anger they refuse to accept it as an extenuation of his heinous conduct. They are ready to believe that in England the rabbit is harmless. They know that in England "bunny" is carefully protected in game preserves, and is regarded as a delicacy for the table of the rich. They know that it is a serious offence for unauthorized persons to kill or steal rabbits from an English game preserve, and that not so very many years ago poachers were transported to the convict settlements of the colonies for life for no graver offence than this; but when they see their Australian farms or grazing lands denuded of every vestige of herbage by hordes of hungry rabbits, the progeny of those first two pairs, they curse loud and long. They go out and slay millions of the pests by poison and suffocating fumes.—Wide World Magazine.

THE WAY IT WORKS OUT.

(Toronto Star)

The way things work out, the laborers generally gets for his labor about what will sustain him while he keeps on laboring. The cost of living generally corresponds with the rate of wages. Where one is high, the other is high; where one is low the other is low what the laborer is paid for his work he expends for his necessities.

The half-naked toiler in the topics, like the skilled mechanic in Toronto, gets paid for this week a sum that will support him while he works until his next pay day. He can join with his fellows, can organize, can strike, or threaten to do so, and gain a wage increase but he cannot boost his wages as easily as others can boost the cost of his necessities.

Those who sell their labor are only interesting themselves in half their problem when they organize to increase their receipts. They need to organize to protect their receipts, they need to fight against the system by which thns expenditures are increasing faster than they can increase their wages.

The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"A BIT TRICKY."

The American vessel interests may clamor for congressional discrimination in the matter of tolls. They may insist that the United States build the canal and has a perfect right to charge what it likes for vessels using the canal.

Admitting all that, there is a higher issue involved—business integrity. The impression is gaining ground that the people of the United States are "a bit tricky." Their native shrewdness in matters of trade is admitted, but their slippery methods are not always admired. "You have to watch them all the time, because you can never tell what kind of a deal they are going to put off," declared a prominent Toronto wholesale merchant.

The attitude of the United States on this Panama canal question is only another example.

TABLE COVERS.

Brocades, Embroideries, Cretonnes for Living Room.

White coverings are not best for the table in the living room, and it is not necessary that the cover should hide the whole surface. There are many attractive materials which can be utilized as covers for table tops. Pieces of old brocades or embroideries can be picked up at reasonable prices at upholstering shops, and if bound in a blain cloth or with wide gold braid are charming. Oval or oblong pieces of plain velours, lined with soft felt or flannel make attractive and equally satisfactory covers for the Oriental rug environment.

For small tables, Japanese mats, with their rich blues, greens and golds or strips of Oriental embroidery are just the thing. And what is more appropriate for the little old time sewing table than an old sampler with its soft bits of color?

In the living room of a certain country place the table cover never fails to attract notice. It is made of an old Persian shawl. The moths played havoc with one corner, but the rest was made into a cover for the family table.

Old fashioned chenille covers if the colorings are right and not too gay are in vogue again. French cretonnes come in such soft, rich colorings, and sometimes in such odd designs that they have the appearance of tapestry. When finished with gold galloon, no handsomer covers could be found than these cretonne squares.

For rooms furnished in the mission style strips and squares of heavy crash bound with coarse colored linen make suitable covers.
