Beautiful Bermuda

By George R. Wreford, F.R.G.S.

To many people, perhaps to most, Bermuda is merely the name of a little group of coral islets in mid-Atlantic. But others there are to whom Bermuda stands for infinitely more. For warmth and sunshine, when the thermometer elsewhere is near to zero; for the luxuriant vegetation of the tropics, when other lands are covered thick with ice and snow.

Bermuda stands for all this and much more to those fortunate ones who have turned in this isle of perpetual summer, where palm trees lift their waving fronds in the warm winter sunshine, and a sky of the deepest blue is reflected in a sea of the colour of turquoise, whilst from the groves of cedars is wafted a fragrance and a perfume that is borne far upon the breeze to vessels in the offing.

Time itself seems to have been banished from this enchanted island. No railways with clanging bell and whistle disturb the peace of night, whilst no motor horns resound here, for the automobile has been banished from Bermuda. In this little colony of the British Crown the horse still remains the chief method of locomotion, whilst the bicycle long since relegated to the scrap heap elsewhere is here regarded as a most useful secondary means of transport, for white coral roads with gentle gradients and perfect surface penetrate to every corner of the island and delight the heart of every cyclist.

But it is in the realm of plant life that Bermuda charms all who visit her shores. Here less than 48 hours after leaving New York, with its ice and snow, we find roses blossoming in the open air, narcissi scenting the air around with their fragrance, to say nothing of the lily and oleander, the hybiscus and the bougainvilla. Amid much that is strange we may see such old friends as geraneums, begonias, jassamine, blossoming not as the objects of the gardener's jealous care but growing all but wild in generous profusion. Plants even more strange meet us at every turn. The aloe and the cactus grow along the roadside, whilst the paw paw and the locust, the sage palm and the mango all remind us how near we are to the tropics

Birds abound in garden and grove—the brilliant red cardinal, the gold finch in his black and gold, the blue bird with his brilliant plumage, the tiny humming bird and the dove in sober grey, all make our gardens both musical with their song and gay with their plumage. They awake one early in the morning, and invite the sluggard to draw aside the curtains and look forth upon the world that is wondrously fair, where earth and sky and land and water all combine to excel the Creator's handiwork. The morning sunlight sparkles upon the waters of harbour or of sound, glent upon houses of dazzling coral set in frame of verdent green against a background of cedar forests, and a cool yet not a cold breeze relieves any sense of oppression and secures a climate that is temperate even in the height of summer.

What is there to do? does some one ask. To merely enumerate the varied pursuits that attract visitors would be to write a chapter. Charming drives may be taken beside the blue waters of sound or harbour, or along green or leafy lanes. Cycling may be indulged in, amid ever changing scenery along perfect roads Tennis and croquet at the houses of the hospitable Bermudians, who dispense to visitors a hospitality that has been famous for the past two hundred years. Boating and fishing and bathing attract many; for the last may be enjoyed on the south shore where the Atlantic rollers break in creamy foam upon a beach of firm white sand. Walks that are endless in their variety are another source of delight to visitors. These occupations with frequent concerts in the hotels, occasional lectures and entertainments in the town, dancing in the evening at many of the hotels, these afford sufficient amusement for the ever increasing numbers of visitors, who by a sojourn in Bermuda seek to escape the rigours of a North American winter.

Bermuda, Feb. 27th, 1921.

E Quisenberry, of Kansas City, president of the American Poultry School. The birds sold were: 1st prize cock, $1000; first, second, third and fourth pullets, $2000. M. Address and Presentation

About fifty friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Forrest, Stage Road, on Thursday evening, March 3rd, to spend a social evening together prior to their departure for their new home in Ballsville.

A splendid program of recitations, songs, instrumental, piano and violin music was given, also short addresses expressing regret at their departure from our midst.

Mr. Jas. McCarthy very ably filled the chair. Mr. and Mrs. Forrest were presented with a handsome clock also a silver pie knife. The address was read by Mrs. Judson Kindree and the presentation made by Mr. W. J. Devine.

Although taken by surprise Mr. and Mrs. Forrest both replied in a few well chosen words expressing their appreciation for the gifts. Afterwards a dainty lunch was served by the ladies and a most pleasant evening was brought to a close by singing "For he's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "God Save the King."

The following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Forrest,

We, your friends and neighbors, hearing that you are about to leave this neighborhood and having proved your worth among us for a number of years, take the opportunity of assembling here tonight to express to you our regret at your departure from among us.

As a friend and neighbor you were always ready to extend your hand in time of need.

We all realize what a splendid thing it is to have a dependable neighbor and you have been so generously kind, sympathetic and helpful. In the hurry and bustle of the times the friendly "drop in" visit is not often indulged in but the heart still craves friendship, occasions call for rejoicing and friendship. Your lives have also been an inspiration to us. When troubles come upon you your Christian fortitude and unwavering trust were wonderful reminders of what God's grace can enable the human heart to bear. A good wife is heaven's last best gift to man; her industry his surest wealth; her economy his safest steward and her prayers the ablest advocate of heaven's blessings on his head.

And in closing we would kindly ask you to accept these gifts as a slight token of esteem; not for their value but for the spirit in which they are given. And in leaving them with you may they serve as a remembrance of your old friends in Walpole.

Signed in behalf of your neighbors.
