IN THE EARLY PIONEER DAYS OF CANADA

a description of their hardships allows the people of today an idea how their forefathers built up the new country of Canada and the condition it was in when General Brock came to Canada. And this the Oath to Canada: "I ... do promise and declare that, I will maintain and defend to the utmost of my power the authority of the King in ris Parliament as supreme legislator of this Province. (This from History).

General Brock's first work was the discovery of the hardships of the common soldiers. This he made his business to reduce, helping their conditions, looking over many offences, gaining their loyalty through his tender hearted kindness, showing kindness in discipline, making their quarters more comfortable. This as well as his kindness shown to the people, he giving aid to the needy and unfortunate, he won the esteem and respect of all classes with whom he came in contact and the confidence of the people. In time General Brock restored order, harmony and co-operation, feted in the government house and the officers mess rooms at Quebec. The French placed confidence in him, as also at York where the legislature met of Upper Canada. He ever encouraged loyalty and patriotism among the people. He rallied the spirits and courage even of them that took the gloomiest view of the situation, they fearing invasion by the States. Over the border the country was well populated. In Canada alittle village here and there, homes scattered widely apart. No wonder they feared war with such odds against them.

General Brock travelled mostly on his grey horse, Alfred. (This horseback riding preferred by women as well as by the men rather than by the stage over bumpy logged roads). His was a strenuous life, keeping in touch with the people, making friends with the Indians. His dark auburn hair had a gray hair here and there. He looked older than he was, his hair retreating over a high forehead, showing a trait of early baldness, a clear cut chin slightly double, a mouth with a curved upper lip, giving his face a kindly expression. His free and easy manner, his aim for justice and fair play, won the hearts of all people. His tall graceful figure, calm resolute eye, showing no emotion but a determination and when cornered in a tight position the spirit to carry this unflinching determination to do or die, rallied the people to come together as one people in a just cause. The English, Indian and French to uphold their country as brothers, and if need be, to fight for home and country.

A careless observer would hardly have imagined this quiet man, so noble, simple in his aims, held in his hand the destiny of a provoked colony. He made a good listener, learning from the people the country's best places for a stronghold. He joined in sight-seeing and the picnics. Always on the alert, he was taking in the place if an attack were made.

The condition of the country was picking up, better homes were being built. Homes being built further in the dense forest. From many a home trees were blazed or chopped to find their way out from their clearing where only a cart path over rough uneven ground left just as it had been "cleared. One side of this road was bounded by the usual "snake" fence enclosing sometimes cultivated land, while the other in most places skirted by the wilderness itself in all its tangled density covered by fallen logs or trees, roots with moss and ferns intermingled sometimes hiding them from view. Here and there an humble inn was to be found amid the surrounding forest, but few were the visitors at Niagara unless they had business that brought them.

Niagara Falls had a beauty in those days it is robbed of today. The river, a great wide basin sweeping round its magnificent cure, opposite to this rose the rugged cliff of the American shores with rich green forest, then the fall of everlasting foam from the heavy fall of water lost below in shadowy spray. Next Goat Island wooded with green foliage and trees like an emerald among the boiling surges, the great curve of the Horseshoe Falls with its deep green water tossing wreaths of snowy foam on its way far below to the turbulent river boiling, tossing, rushing along, growing calmer as it cleared the American Falls on its way to the whirlpool below.

In visiting Fort George, a half mile from the village of Newark (now Niagara on the Lake), across the blue waters the Fort Niagara could be seen. Just the river between, yet here amid the clash of arms and rattle of musketry, men dying with the blood of his brother man the tender fern and green forest leaves. It leaves a sad thought, a noble memory to the place forever.

America's sympathy was with France, who was then at the feet of Napoleon, Britain alone was a stumbling block in his way. To the removal of this obstacle the emporer devoted all the resources of the French Empire. The American ambition and anti-British feeling, it seemed as if America was trying to provoke a declaration of war, knowing England was having trouble at home, she went so far as to allow the firing on peaceful merchant vessels dropping quietly down the Niagara River. This with other annoyances, in Canada it seemed the time was near at hand to set to get Canada away from England and the British rule.

General Brock was far too much occupied with his dutys and responsibilities for thoughts of his consequences. When as now the prospect of war became the theme of conversation, it was the habit of General Brock to listen rather than talk, to receive suggestions of others rather than to express his own opinions, not from reticence as from a desire to learn all he could of the subject under consideration. In this way he often gained most valuable information.

The following passage is extracted from a letter of General Brock in 1808:

"We have completely outwitted Jefferson and all his schemes to provoke us to war. He had no other object in view in issuing his retrictive proclamation, but failing in that he tried what the embargo would produce, and in this he has been foiled again. Certainly our administration is deserving of every praise for their policy in the occasions. Jefferson and his party, however strong the inlinclination, dare not declare war, therefore they endeavor to attain their object by every provocation."
