A ROVING REPORTER -: LOOKS AT LIFE :-

"THE LITTLE TOWN"

By deliberate choice and inclination the Roving Reporter has made his home in a little town for several years. He did not do so without reason. He had lived for five years in a big city, a city where people hurried and bustled around him all the time — where life was keyed up to a swift tempo, where street cars changed their bells and impatient autoists blew their horns unceasingly, where people were crowded into apartments and flats — and barely had enough room to turn round; he spent some time in the great cities of Toronto and New York and then he deliberately found a home in a small town. He is perfectly content to live there the rest of his life. Note that he said "live," for that is what he is doing, he existed in the big city, he is living now.

Happy indeed is that man who can live in a small town — a town with tree lined streets, and trim neat houses, where there are not so many people that one has to look twice at them before he recognizes them, where everybody knows their neighbors, and shares their joys and sorrows with them, where the advent of a new baby is as important to the citizens as a change in government, where everyone is known as "Bill" or "John" or "George" instead of "Mr."; where the "Village Weekly" tells who painted their barn and what color they painted it; where neighbors gossip over the backyard fence, or meet at the post office twice a day and discuss the daily news. Let the city dweller have his bustle, his street cars, his big lodge with its hundreds of members, who hardly know the brother who sits next to them, his "great white way," and crowded streets. Give me the little town — the friendship, the little lodge where from Master to Tyler I know them all; perhaps there isn't the style and polish there, but there is something better - real fraternity - perhaps there isn't the same amount of "culture," but there is real, native, sympathy and understanding; perhaps the citizens cannot discuss the latest novel or best seller, but they can discuss intelligently the problems which confront them and their fellows; perhaps they cannot see the "movies" as often as those slaves of the city think is necessary, but they can see something the city dweller never sees, the swift changing colors of the sunset, colors that no robe with the changing seasons, can see the clouds, the trees, and hear the birds; catch the first flush of early dawn and can settle down at night in a home unlike many a city man who lives in what one writer calls "a parking and a filling station"; can settle down to a night's rest of undisturbed slumber and wake up refreshed and renewed for a good days work.

Yes — give this Roving Reporter "The Little Town" anytime. He feels like his good friend "Anonymous" and he is not afraid to say so.

"I love to live in a little town,
Where the trees meet over the street.
And you wave your hand and say "Hello"
To everyone you meet.

I like to stop for a minute,
Outside the grocery store
And hear the kindly gossip
Of the folks moving in next door.

For life is interwoven
With the friends you learn to know
And you feel their joys and sorrows
As they daily come and go.

So I'm glad to live in a little town
And care no more to roam,
For every house in a little town
Is more than a house — it's home."

SPEEDING DOWN -:- THE -:- SPORTS TRAIL

By A.R.P.

By the time this meets the eye of our own sports minded people we will either have a new heavyweight champion of the world or the same face below the much coveted crown. As far as we are concerned the outcome of the battle of the century will mean next to nothing but just the same I'll wager that Ninety per cent of the people in this locality are more than a little interested in the result of the match.

You hear this person say Schmeling will win within twelve rounds and the next person has it that Louis is a cinch to take the German in five. Although the odds are 8 to one favoring the champion it's just a toss up, and you will find just as many if not more fans favoring Schmeling.

Jack Demsy, Gene Tunney, Max Baer and different other ex-champions are favoring the dusky one but if the German should have had right hand raised following the championship match these same ex-greats will more than likely nod and remark: "I told you so."

The fight will mean far more to Max. If he should win he will be the only heavy to ever regain the title. But on the other hand if the decision should favor Louis, Schmeling might just as well stay in America because his home coming reception might not be too warm.

Everything appears to be against Schmeling. Louis is the favorite, and no heavyweight has ever regained the title. Max at thirty-two is eight years the champion's senior and is quoted as being past his best form which the Bomber at twenty-four is just reaching the peak of his career. Louis is a better boxer and has a far better left hand. The German though is credited with having one of the best rights in the business. With all these points on the negro's side we are going to string along with Schmeling and call him to win by a knockout — the round about the ninth.

As this corner will not be seen until after the fight you fans can see just how far wrong we were in our decision. One might just as well have put the name of both fighters in a hat and picked the winner by luck.

Well, enough with the past and more about the future and especially concerning the softball fans in town It seems a team, South Cayuga, to be exact, has dropped out of the Fisherville Softball League and a team from Jarvis has been asked to fill the spot. It also seems that South Cayuga had won no games while in the running which will leave Jarvis handicapped in finding a play-off berth but we think a local team under the guidance of Manager Cresswell can make a proud showing for themselves.

GOOD SUGGESTIONS FOR RAISING PIGS

Profitable raising of pigs is dependent mainly on two things: Weaning of large litters of thrifty pigs, and feeding of these pigs economically to market weight, states Edward B. Fraser, Division of Animal Husbandry, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. It is important that the finished pigs be of suitable bacon type, and for the intensive production of high-class select bacon it is generally recommended that the growing and fattening pigs should be fed almost entirely indoors. However, a good pasture may sometimes be used to advantage until the pigs are three or four months old. The feeding of grain should always accompany the use of pasture.

After the pigs are four months old they should be ready for more intensive feeding, and this can be carried out most satisfactorily indoors, where exercise is restricted. More feed should be allowed the pigs and mixture should be changed so that it is more fattening than during the earlier stages of growth and development. Bacon hogs should be grown and finished so that they will be ready for market at six months of age, at which time they should weigh between 190 and 230 pounds. These are the select or Grade A weights for which the premium is paid if the carcasses are of suitable quality.

The choice of suitable feed mixtures for the growing and fattening pigs will be governed by the feeds available, and a protein supplement should be fed along with the grain mixture. Skimmilk or buttermilk should be used if available, and fed in a uniformly sour condition. After weaning, feed three pounds of milk to each pound of meal and gradually reduce as the pigs develop. Whey, which is approximately half as valuable as either of the above, should be fed sweet. When these milk by-products are not available, tankage or fish hmeal can be used to supply the necessary protein. Ten per cent of either, or a mixture of these supplements in the grain mixture should be fed at the start, and gradually reduced to five per cent.

Succulents and minerals must also be mentioned. When the p
