ARMISTICE DAY 1941

ace.

At the Horse Palace the men back from overseas stood around until 10.30 waiting for the officers of the medical board that should have been ready and waiting for them. Wives and families stood and waited too. At 10.30 the men were paraded out of the Horse Palace, given something to eat, marched back to wait again on the medical board's convenience.

Then they waited some more for the pay they were supposed to be getting. Along in the afternoon, they were told there was none for them. They were told their pay books would have to be checked at Ottawa first and it would take ten days or so. Meantime they could have a couple of blankets apiece and sleep in the Horse Palace.

That was the point where the private from across the border told the Canadian Army Active where it could go and started out to panhandle a nickel and find a pay phone.

Such of his fellows in misfortune as had a friend, took leave from the Horse Palace and refuge with a friend. The rest were still there when this was written sleeping in the stalls, begging the odd cigarette and injured men back from overseas waiting for the well-paid incompetence that stayed home to give them the back pay Canada owes them and to let them out of the army.

The man who was all cut up with shrapnel is among those kept waiting. When last seen he was waiting for underwear and a topcoat as well as for his pay. All he had was the rag of the battle dress he had on when he was hit. Everything else of his was lost in the bombing raid. None of it had been replaced. He was also short a discharge. The private from the United States told why:

"They're going to keep him in the army to help recruiting.' Yep and I hope they do. A helluva help he'll be if he keeps on swearing at them the way he was when I left. ."

The thing to remember about this report is that it is not exceptional. It is standard. Talk to any of the private soldiers who have been invalided out of the Canadian Army this war. A hundred to one, you'll get some variant of the same story of thick-headed and callous-hearted indifference dishonouring the King's commission. Don't wait till they are out. Talk to the sick men who are kept hanging around without their discharge while office-sitters in your employ try to diddle them out of their pension claims. Remember that more than 30,000 enlisted men have already been discharged as physically unfit for active service. Remember that every man has a tongue. Remember that underlings do not penny-pinch at the expense of sick and unfriended men without encouragement from above.

Britain, Canada and the United States. As Churchill once said of the intermingling of interests, "Let it roll on" and as Thorson, minister of war services asked a Windsor audience a few days ago: "Is it too much to hope that before it is too late our partnership may be merged into a great union of the remaining free nations of the world?" The hourglass has run out too far to make us hide any longer the depths and scope of our wishes for aid from the United States.

A very encouraging report of Canada's relations with South American countries was given by minister of trade and commerce, MacKinnon when he returned with other members of his trade mission from their Southern tour. What was particularly cheerful news, in view of some times disturbing accounts of Nazi infiltration, was that he found the "overwhelming" sentiment of South American people in favor of the democracies in the world struggle. There had been a great change in sentiment in the past three months. The minister brought word of the signing of trade treaties under "most favored nation" terms with Brazil, Argentina, Chile and Ecuador with the removal of surtaxes and exchange restrictions which had been in force against Canada in some of the Southern countries. With shipping troubles and other dislocation caused by the war there wasn't much hope for great results from the Trade treaties until the end of the war, but the basis was laid for post-war commercial relations.

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board is marching straight forward with its plan to put the new price control system into operation on November 17th. This has been described as the "greatest task ever placed on a Canadian government board." and few could be found to question that statement. The appointment of E. C. Burton of Toronto as Administrator of Retail Trade is the first of a series of appointments under the plan. It will be a complicated machinery, as the prime minister said when he outlined the blanket control, but the experience of the board and the character of its personnel assure the Canadian people that the program will be carried out with foresight and steadfastness.

At the time of writing the announcement is awaited of the personnel of the National War Labor Board, which will administer the new wage control system. The duties of this board and the five regional labor boards which will assist it, were outlined by the minister of labor in a press interview and a broadcast. The plan differs little from the policy which the labor department attempted to put into effect by persuasion. Now it has become mandatory. It is a necessary part of the control system, and its success like that of price control depends on the cooperation of the Canadian people.

As the prime minister said recently this is true of the whole war effort. It can only be as big "as the amount of cooperation put into it by the people of Canada".

The most vital perhaps of all questions which will be discussed in parliament will be how to make the most effective use of the man and woman power of Canada. It is the persistent and pressing problem. Its existence implies no criticism of the wonderful effort that Canada has been making, but it does imply the immediate recognition by all Canadians that this is a war which demands the utmost in sacrifice and effort of every citizen.

Wanted! Equal Shares For All --

If anyone should know the demands necessary to be made on the Canadian Public in the war effort it is the Government of Canada. But despite the many months the war has gone on, we are still far from a total effort. It is doubtful if the Canadian people can be blamed entirely for such a situation. While we should be able to determine largely for ourselves how important it is that we all do our part, it still remains for the Government of Canada to give the leadership.

We are told men are needed in the army, the Air Force and the Navy; we are told the use of gasoline must be drastically reduced; that we must adjust to the limit of our resources for war savings certificates, as well as numerous other things. We are told that requests such as these is a democratic way. It is. But it is used in such an emergency as this we can well afford to forsake our democratic ideals temporarily at least if by so doing, we can guarantee a continuance of those ideals for our children. Surely no one will doubt that our Christian and social attainments in recent decades has helped to make our citizens hanker after a shooting affray with fellow human beings. Surely too the Government will soon realize that the members of those with for the flair for adventure, or for purely broad military views, will soon be exhausted. Then it will be necessary to resort to conscription if the strength of our armed forces will ever reach the maximum. The point is well illustrated by the well known column of J. V. McAree, who stated, "If the raising of taxes were left to voluntary how many people would pay their?" "What means of propaganda would be required to induce a man in a hundred to pay when he knew that ninety-nine other men of a hundred would not pay." Both political parties dominating the National scene at the present time with the hope, no doubt, of lightening their own ort, declaring against conscription in the last campaign. And still they hold to it. Citizens who have the interest of their country at heart have long forgotten the promises of 1939 that relates to conscription. What we need now is someone to tell what to do to help the most in winning the war. If men are needed they should be conscripted along with wealth. If gasoline is needed it should be rationed. And all we do to obtain these things is a law on statute books of Canada. Canada would welcome it.

Letters Overseas

Just returning from his recent overseas, Mr. Hugh Templin, representative of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association, said the boys in there need letters badly, especially friendly letters. Make them newsy, (gossip, if you like) and write soon, and be sure to follow it with others.

Is this another shortcoming on the part of civilians at home. Maybe you write to one or two with whom you are related or who have been close friends. But wouldn't it be nice to write occasionally to another of the boys enlisted and serving overseas from this district. Maybe you were not personally acquainted with them. Nevertheless, receiving a letter from anyone in your own district would be a Godsend to any of the boys over there, and nothing would be more convincing to them they are being remembered by those at home.

Sgt. G. Parkinson Graduated at Jarvis

FIRST LOCAL MAN TO RECEIVE WINGS AT No. 1 BOMBING & GUNNERY SCHOOL

Sgt. George G. Parkinson, son of Mr. Richard Parkinson and the late Mrs. Parkinson, was among the large class of graduates to receive their wings at the Graduation Ceremony at No. 1 Bombing and Gunnery School on Saturday.

The class was the largest in the history of the station, and included men from all parts of Canada, as well as a few from New Zealand. The graduates included Observers, Wireless Air Gunners and Air Gunners. Sgt. Parkinson graduated in the Observers Class, regarded as one of the most important branches of the training scheme. A number of his friends and relatives were present at the ceremony. Sgt. Parkinson is the first local man to graduate from the Jarvis School.

In presenting the wings, Group Capt. Wait said: "Your work is done here, but your most important work is just starting. Following the ceremony the Commanding Officers invited those present at the ceremony to the Mess Hall where afternoon tea was served.

The service was conducted by Rev. S. B. East. Rev. W. H. Fuller led in prayer and Padre Lloyd delivered a thought provoking address.

Following the service the assembly marched to the Cenotaph, led by the School Children and Veterans. Mrs. John Church deposited the Province of Ontario Wreath, and the Burn's Club Wreath was deposited by John Graham. The Last Post was sounded by LAC R. H. Wade, and LAC R. J. GRADUATES RECEIVE WINGS FROM AIR COMMODORE G. E. BROOKS

A further step in the progress of the British Empire Air Training plan was marked on Thursday when the first class of men graduated from the Hagersville Service Flying Training School, designated as No. 16 in the plan.

The Hagersville School is an example of the speed with which the training plan is going forward. Early this year, the present Hagersville School was still farm land. Today it is almost completed with a great array of buildings and hangars While the landscaping is still in the rough, the essentials for the training of men are well established, and Group Capt. G. C. O'Brian, O.C. of the school, in congratulating the class said he was proud of their high standing. The class including Canadians and several from the United States, all graduated as Bomber Pilots and seven of them received commissions as Pilot Officers.

Air Commodore G. E. Brooks, made a special trip to Hagersville to present the wings. He reminded the graduates their studies were not completed, and reminded them that much still was to be done by hard work and further study.

A Weekly Review Of National Affairs

(By "Spectator")

Ottawa, November 11th The Army must play a vital, perhaps the most vital part in the winning of this war. This truth is being driven home on the floor of parliament this session. It will be a great army of the democracies, overwhelmingly powerful in modern equipment and iin manpower that will give the death blow to Hitlerism. That is the goal for Canada and for all other free nations of the world.

The feature of the present session has been the account given by ministers of the war services of the work of their departments. There is no legislation on the order paper. Parliament's whole concern is with the conduct of the war, and in particular with Canada's part in it. Col. Ralston who returned by bomber from Britain after parliament had met, told the house that the role of the army in this war "is and will not be a minor role." There was no limit to the number of divisions to be raised. The limit of Canada's war effort was nothing less than the limit of her powers. "It seems to me" he said, "that Canada's war activities are not something that should be apologized for or to deprecate." Our contributions in men, munitions and money constitute a tremendous effort." There were now more than 110,000 men in Canada's forces overseas exclusive of the Air Force. The fifth armored division would soon be sent to Britain to join the three divisions and the thousands of corps troops standing on guard, vigilant and ready for any emergency, within forty miles of the continental armies of Germany. Col. Ralston told the house that the war cabinet had made a preliminary survey of manpower to guide its policy, but he urged the people of Canada to realize the vital importance of supporting the army and of putting their full power behind recruiting, men were needed for the army, more and more men. "I am not defeatist" said Col. Ralston, "I believe we shall win, but not simply because, we say so, but because Canada along with the other democracies "will stop at nothing" to prevent the enslavement of mankind." We can take nothing for granted any longer. "The menace is against Canada as well as the rest of the world."

The work of the Royal Canadian Air Force in the skies over all fronts was painted vividly and with natural pride by the Minister for Air "Chubby" Power. They are over Germany every night. "They are in Tripoli, Libya and Russia" said the Minister. The cream of Canadian youth are in the Air Force, numbering now 90,000, with 16 squadrons in active operation overseas and many thousands in the Royal Air Force. There is no trouble about getting recruits. The young men of Canada want to join the Air Force, and as far as the objective for the Force is concerned "the sky is the limit," he said.

The "silent service" convoys troops and goods across the seas, patrols our coasts and cooperates in various seas with the Royal Navy. From a force of about 1,700 or 1,800 men at the outbreak of war, The Royal Canadian Navy has 27,000 officers and men and 300 ships, minister of naval service, Angus Macdonald informed the house. It has been a "phenomenal" expansion. The Canadian Navy has helped to convoy 7,000 cargo ships bearing 42,500,000 tons of mer chandise to Britain. Not a single passenger has been lost in troop ships going to the line of battle in Britain.

Members of the house were impressed by the story of Canada's war production, given by Munitions Minister, C. D. Howe. It was a record devoid of the glamour that attaches to the fighting services, but none the less gratifying. In this war of modern mechanized equipment, it is pleasing to hear that Canada from a standing start is now do-

The Royal Courtiers to Present Program

PROCEEDS FOR RED CROSS WORK

Every citizen in Jarvis and district has a date for Thursday night, November 20th. Nothing must prevent the Red Cross Concert in the Jarvis Town Hall from being the best attended event in the history of the Village. At no time has any entertainment been more worthy of support, and in addition exceptionally fine talent will be on hand to entertain.

"The Royal Courtiers" of Hamilton, who are already familiar to many will present humorous sketches and songs, modern and from the gay nineties. The program will be under the direction of Mr. Leslie Somerville.

The money derived from the sale of tickets will be used entirely by the Local Branch of the Red Cross, to assist them in carrying on their valuable work. With no campaign this fall for the raising of money, the local branch have experienced difficulty in financing their work. This is one opportunity for everyone to tangibly express their appreciation of the fine work the ladies of the Red Cross are doing. And even if you attend the concert or not, be sure to buy a ticket from one of the many girls now selling them from door to door.

Democracy or something

by Judith Robinson

This is to celebrate an unknown fat man who stood and kept on standing for democracy or something at Ottawa, November eight, nineteen forty-one.

The day was the second representative Conservatives had spent in the Railway Committee Room of Parliament trying to choose their party a convention date and — or leader.

The Railway Committee Room is a large, pale, oak-panelled chamber with maps on its walls. Its door is second turn to the right inside the House of Commons entrance. First turn to the right is the way to the Peace Tower.

Inside the Railway Committee Room, representative Conservatives worked hard deciding whether it was a convention date or a leader they were choosing. They were occasionally to be heard, but never seen at work. The doors were closed, masked and guarded by a pink folding screen, a policeman and a house attendant. None but the most representative Conservatives got past the guard. The Waiting grew tiresome after while.

At two in the afternoon the first day, the bells in the Peace Tower began playing "Caller Herrin." The way to the top of the tower is by three elevators and some flights of stairs. The last elevator is a little one that runs close beside the bells hanging ranked together in their great frame. The tower there when the carillon is ringing is filled with it's park pattern of curves and sudden angles and shaken with hurrying sound. The bells were still playing "Caller Herrin" when the elevator stopped above them in the high square room that has the four clock-faces for windows. The doors under them give onto the tower balconies. Even on a grey day in November Canada is beautiful any way you look from the balconies below the clock of the peace tower.

"——lives of men" the tenor bells cried the three notes into silence. An M.P. with a constituent came out on the balcony and said all those blue roofs down there were copper. They got that way. The constituent said yes, he knew they did. A lady came with her husband and said was that Hull and what was that pile of yellow stuff behind the coal heaps, some people just couldn't look down from these places it made them want to jump over she wondered why.

An airman came with his girl and said see those huts away down there that's where he lived. A soldier came and didn't say anything, only looked for a long time at the grey river and the sombre trees and the folds of the far hills. Another airman came, a little young boy with the white piece in his cap front. He said it was almost as good as looking down from a 'plane. He liked flying, he said and he was glad he did. His father had been a flier last war. He guessed it was getting to be a habit in his family. He thought his father would have been glad he was flying. He hoped so. He couldn't remember his father really, only being dangled on his knee when he was little. His father had died after the last war. Look at that rowboat down there, little as a waterbug.
