Election

while others provided changes and alterations.

New legislation was provided in response to the urgent requirement for government action in a number of policy areas.

Since March 1, the record will show that more than 150 individual items of legislation have been passed or initiated and, as was indicated at our conference this morning, there is always more to be done.

Furthermore, it seemed only reasonable that I would want to give the people of Ontario an opportunity to make some judgement of their new Prime Minister, as to the kind of leadership he would provide them in that office.

I hope the past six months have been sufficient in that regard and, of course, I would hope their impression would be favorable.

Now I believe it appropriate, and in the general interest of all concerned, that I seek a mandate of my own.

We are, as all of us recognize, undergoing a difficult period in Canada's history. National problems not of our making, and external decisions not of our choosing, all combine to present difficulties and challenges to our provincial economy. Despite our wealth of talent and resources, Ontario is not immune to conditions elsewhere.

This is, I believe, a time when the quality and calibre of government is of vital importance to every citizen in Ontario. It is especially a time when the people of Ontario require leadership in the management of their affairs in which they feel they can have confidence, as it is also a time when the leader of this province needs to feel that he has the confidence of the people of Ontario.

In my belief, it will be to the advantage of good government, sound and progressive administration, and effective, decisive leadership if the election results in a clear and decisive mandate.

As proud as I am of past achievements, I am confident of our capacity to accomplish even more in the years ahead.

No province in Canada could provide its people with greater opportunities for productive and rewarding lives. It will be the task of future leadership and government to maintain the momentum of our history.

It is in our interest, and in Canada's interest, that Ontario continue to be an example of the achievements of a free and enterprising people, proud of their heritage, sensitive in their concern for social justice, prudent in the care and control of their resources, devoted to the strength and vitality of our Confederation, steadfast in their faith in their institutions, and confident of their future.

During the past six months, my colleagues and I have sought to provide Ontario with a government responsive to the public interest, willing to listen, and able to act.

We have been, and we intend to be, a government of decision. If the people of Ontario wish us to proceed, that decision is now theirs to make.

DOG DISEASE

SASKATOON (CP) — The University of Saskatchewan has started to study a rare disease that strikes a small number of dogs of the Basenji breed, sometimes called the "barkless dogs of Africa." Dr. G. P. Searcy has found that a small number of the dogs have an enzyme deficiency that causes their red blood cells to break down more rapidly than normal, causing severe anemia.

dropped because there is little restriction by grades. Students may choose to take subjects out of their normal "year."

Thus a student could choose to take chemistry, normally taken in year four, in his third year, or he may go back to year four and pick up subjects missed or overlooked in earlier years.

Another feature of the credit system is that some students may be able to complete five normal years' work in four years. By taking a full program each year, and by taking one summer course, the Secondary School Honor Graduation Diploma could be achieved in four years.

Flexibility is the key to the changes. The timetable and program are both more flexible, and should help the average student to organize a personal program of study fitted to his needs and abilitites.
