EDUCATED PEOPLE NEVER POOR —

Every branch of education in this country needs more money, as governments and taxpayers are painfully aware.

On Tuesday the Canadian Universities Foundation asked the Ottawa government for more help . - Foresaying that colleges will have to slam their doors against qualified applicants unless in the next three years they can get $800 million more in buildings and facilities. The Ontario government is being besieged by university authorities, councils and school boards for bigger school grants. Trustees are having to dip deeper and deeper into local taxpayers' pockets.

Has education become a sacred cow, before whom government and taxpayers must bow?

There is no doubt that the girl will have to be trimmed off many projects. For education is not the only public service that has to be nourished. Nevertheless, its primary importance must be maintained. The chief reason for mounting costs is that more young people want more education, and should have it. For instance, although the teenage population of the province of Toronto has not increased, the number of secondary school students has gone up by a thousand in the last four years. Let us not bemoan this.

A striking reason for not grudging expenditure on public education was advanced this week in New York by the Harvard economist J. K. Galbraith, author of The Affluent Society. In a nutshell it is this: Education banishes poverty.

Mr. Galbraith said: "To the best of my knowledge, there is no place in the world where well educated people are really poor."

He was proposing, to an audience that included senior Washington cabinet ministers, ways to relieve the pockets of poverty that blotch the United States. He suggested designating such rural and city slums as "special education districts" and pouring money and specially able teachers into them. He termed this kind of attack on poverty "the most effective step that could be taken. Can any one argue that youngsters with these facilities and training would share the dismal fate of their parents?

Money invested as human capital, as spending on education is, returns dividends beyond reckoning.

you ever noticed how seem to repeat themselves. I mean that, after a years, we find people very much as they were ago. It is so apparent obvious one today is rival of folk music and With the "Twist" we to have come a long from our grandparents then, all of a sudden we back there again. Something similar has happened in Ontario. Not to the rest of you, I have the commercials (it only advertising I read) have been surprised to hear Brand Names that familiar in my far off old days are being pressed all "across up" in models, but the same names presumably, the same process as the variety of Brands drug store shelves, which are not even adapted, is bewildering but I get to-day the same remedies that my parents used to wonder how the drugs I remember all the brands has in stock, let alone they are displayed).

can see the same thing terms of life. The old was a pretty handy He repaired the harness and most of the implements he used and there were he he could not tackle parts for them, partly due to economy. Cash was a minor item, even the grocers were paid for by trade. mer's wife traded better and better for her grocery the farmer could not to pay cash for his repairs. Then, slowly, a change The farmer had more and the implements were more and more complex. Consequently less and repair work was done on farm and trips to the repair garage became more frequent. Now, another change is taking place and the farmer is doing more work at home. This is particularly true of the younger men, some of whom are now taking training courses in the repair of implements and machines.

Of course, the cycle never goes back to exactly where it started. It is really a spiral and we move upward (downward?) all the time. Repairing a tractor or the family car is quite different from patching the harness or repairing the buggy, but the idea is the same...the farmer is once again the handy man, even though he has to get special training to do the modern jobs.

The same idea can be seen in another field. Once every village had its own industry—a mill, a small manufacturing or whatever it was. We do not mean such things as local stores ,garages etc. The modern equivalent is simply the old blacksmith shop. Then, the industry in the village got bigger the little local factories were forced out of business and local industries practically passed out of sight. Today, the local industry is coming back. Enterprising young men and women are setting up in business ..very modern business... for themselves and making it pay. In fact, I read that some of the large concerns like to have some small local industry make certain parts for them.

This is all to the good. The farmer is a man who takes a pride in his work, who has a strong sense of accomplishment and if this can be extended into the area of mechanics and home repairs, so much the better. To us, in this neighbourhood, the need for local industries needs no emphasis. The Dominion Government had two good reasons for closing the Hagersville Army Camp, apparently, but could not give Provincial Government step in and try to secure a local industry.

UTH LEADERS ARE GUESTS LIONS CLUB MEETING

"Mr. Smillie, who once represented Canada in the Olympics as a boxer and who served in the Royal Canadian Navy as a Lieutenant Commander during World War Two said that there are more than 125 million telephones throughout the world.

"Poor or delayed connections are usually caused by politics rather than by transmission now", he claimed.

Discussing some of the most complex equipment ever designed Mr. Smillie said the company uses the new inventions along with present facilities to give better service and to keep costs at a minimum.

As an example of the progress he explained how only 35 years ago people talked on telephones as if they were 75 to 80 feet apart. "Today", he said "people use the telephone as if they are six-feet away from one another".

"Transmission over land, under water and through practically every medium of which this earth is made up has been mastered".

"And soon the microwave towers which dot the countryside from coast-to-coast will be supplemented with "towers in the sky".

"These satelites - now in their infancy - with their fabulous tracking stations will soon open the door to instant world-wide communications", Mr. Smillie said.

The thanks of the gathering was extended to Mr. Smilie by Lion Bill Addison.

WARD PARSONS CAPTAIN OF P.M.'s AIRCRAFT

Captain Ward Parsons of British Overseas Airways Corporation is in charge of the Comet Jet Aircraft which brought Prime Minister Alec Douglas-Home to Canada on the week end. Following talks in Ottawa he brought the Prime Minister and his party to Toronto on Tuesday where Sir Alec addressed the Empire Club. Later the same day, they left for Washington for talks with President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Capt. Parsons joined B.C.A.C. shortly after the end of World War II and after a couple of years in Montreal was transferred to England where he and his wife, the former Shirley Reicheld, of Jarvis, have since made their home.

Over the past fifteen years Capt. Parson's flights have taken him to all parts of the world and he is now one of the Senior Pilots in B.O.A.C. service. He plans to take a holiday this year but he is not going to go fishing at a secluded hunting lodge — he plans to take his wife and family on an air flight around the world.

PUBLIC INVITED TO INSPECT FACILITIES ON SATURDAY AND SUNDAY, FEB. 22 & 23

Plans are being finalized for the official opening of the new West Haldimand General Hospital, at 2 P.M. on Saturday, February 22nd, when the Hon. Matthew Dymond, Minister of Health for the Province of Ontarii will take part in the ceremonies.

DON'T GUESS TEST!

Free soil testing is another AERO® Fertilizer Service designed to help you increase your crop profits and productiveness of your soil. Here are some simple tips to follow in taking a soil test and obtaining the most value from it. Remember a soil test can be no better than the samples submitted for testing — follow this guide carefully so that when your soil sample is analyzed the best possible recommendations can be made.

HOW TO TAKE A SOIL SAMPLE

1 Call us for full information. We can provide you with complete details on the best sampling procedures to follow for your area.

2 Sampling tools are important. A soil auger is generally the best tool to use when taking soil samples, however, a spade or trowel will also do the job. As an extra AERO Fertilizer service we have soil augers available for your use — call us for details.
Make sure the pail you use for collecting samples is perfectly clean so that samples won't become contaminated.

3 Divide Fields Evenly for Sampling — A good rule of thumb is that each sample should represent no more than 5 — 10 acres. Areas that have different histories e.g. crop growth, soil texture, or past fertilizer management should be sampled separately.

4 Avoid Taking Samples from Unusual Areas — Avoid taking samples from such areas as windbreaks, dead furrows, levelling areas, new tile runs, marshy areas near trees, etc. If you want fertilizers for such areas be certain your sample comes from the strip and is so marked.

5 Sample evenly from each area — Follow these tips —
(a) scrape away surface litter
(b) insert auger to plow depth
(c) take 15 samples from each area and PLACE IN CLEAN PAIL
(d) if sampling from where row crops are planted take soil from between rows.

6 Sampling with a Spade ? — Follow these tips —
(a) Dig a V-shaped hole to plow depth
(b) Cut a ½ inch thick slice of soil from face of hole.
(c) Trim away soil from both sides of spade leaving a 1-inch strip of soil down the middle of the spade.
(d) Place samples in a clean pail.

7 Mix Samples thoroughly in a Clean Pail — Fill the soil test box you have obtained from your AERO Fertilizer Manufacturer. Clean pail well before collecting further samples.

8 The Information you Give us is Important — Fill out the information sheet as accurately as possible. Soil history, cropping practices, etc. are important to a good soil test and subsequent fertilizer recommendations.

9 Keep Good Records — When taking your samples draw a rough sketch of the fields being sampled and mark each sample area with the number you place on the sample carton.
