Fires Still Fought

SLAVE LAKE, Alta. Despite several inches of snow and sub-zero temperatures, forest fires are still being fought in the Slave Lake area, 130 miles northwest of Edmonton.

A carryover from a bad outbreak last May, 37 fires are either burning on the surface or smouldering in the subsoil of the Slave Lake forest region and threaten to touch off new blazes next spring if they are not extinguished.

The forest service branch of the lands and forests department is faced with the choice of digging the fires out and applying water or surrounding them with a fire guard to prevent them from spreading.
