CURRENT NOTES.

A Jarvis ledy is so strong a prohibitionist that she refuses to have a bar of soap in her house.

This finding of Cronin letters is getting to be a chestnut The Clan-nafael is cunning; but its methods are ransparent.

Kingston people used barbed wire to enemies. dence in their boulevards, and Miss Nancy, of the News, protests. They say that her last new gauzy summer sat quivering, its eyes fixed on the adgown has been utterly ruined by the vancing olios. When near she rushed

The inhabitants of Cyprus recently petitioned the British Government for reduction of taxation. They informed them that the population was 200,-000, and that the taxes were £115,000; that this was very heavy, and that they could not go on paying it. The tax is or golden rod, and if you see a few eleven shillings and sixpence, or less the Statistical Abstract and Records, was $5.67 per head.

Maternal Instinct in Spiders.

It is a fact well known to naturalists her home. that mother love in spiders is very fierce and strong for the time it lasts. What a wonderful provision is made soft than the fabrics spun by the spider M. L. Pike in Scientific American. to keep her brood warm and impervious to torrential rains or scorehing drought.

but in some out of the way corner lays her eggs and a large, flat cocoon of strong, cream-colored silk, as large as a 25 cent piece, in which they are inclosed. If disturbed, she holds the cocoon close to her body with two of her legs, but if not, she fixes it by a mass of fine threads to some safe place and watches it. I saw one fasten her cocoon on a door and wanted to have a good look at it, but on my approach she dashed to her cocoon, cut the threads with her mandibles, clasped her precious burden to her, and was out of sight in less time than I have written it. She roamed around for awhile and took her station behind a window curtain, and there remained fifteen days motionless. When the eggs were ready to hatch, the mother stuck the edge of the cocoon, making a clean cut, and out poured the young. When approached she raised her palpi and strutted about, trying to frighten you, and then huddled up her young ones that swarmed all over her. They remained only a few days with she seek food or rest.

Olios are universal in the African islands of the Indian Ocean, and grow large. It is startling at first to see the great hairy creatures prowling over your walls; but their voracious appetites (especially when the duties of of maternity are over) and tenacity of purpose when persuing their prey render invaluable service to man. The old houses swarm with disgusting Elattae, or cockroaches, from an inch and a half long to less than one-half an inch. I once saw the capture of one of the former by an olios. It was eating a piece of bread, and I was about to kill it when I saw an olios not half its size creeping stealthily along the wall. Being curious to see if the tales were true of its killing such large prey, I left the field to it. Very soon the cockroach's attention was drawn to its deadly foe and it stopped eating. They speak of the fascination of snakes for birds, etc., but it, or whatever the power may be, is equally displayed between these

The cockroach had plenty of time to escape, but it appeared paralyzed, and at it, whipped it off its legs, and clasped it so tightly it could not entangle her A writer in The New York Times long legs with its claws. She soon bethough I removed the glass, she did not move till only skin and legs remained. After this experience the olsos had full liberty to roam round unmolested.

One spider, a Dolomedes, carries her cocoon in her mandibles, and when incubation is nearly over, she attaches it to a low bush or dead branch, and the little ones as they hatch out, and for them to rest in till strong enough The fire less of the United States to forage round alone, she watching near, till they disappear.

The young swarm all over the mother, and she carries them about with her for several days. In some cases she falls a victim to her devotion, as the little creatures have such voracious appetites they devour their

One of the Epeiras hangs her cocoons, little triangular ones with pointed tips, across her web, and every insect, when she has sucked the life out of him, is incased in a silken shroud and hung alongside the cocoons, till what with these, dust, straws, and other debris, it is impossible to distinguish the eggs. The mother places herself in a corner of the web, or in a cosy nest in a rolled leaf near, but so surrounded by silken burghir alirms that not the smallest in-

I do not know of any large spider that allows the male to approach her when tending either cocoon or young. His life would end there and then if he molested her, as the females have no scruples about devouring their spouses Blank Forms, if they interfere in household matters. He may construct a house for himself, but it must be placed at a respectable distance from hers.
