A STRETCHER.—A Southwold pioneer tell the following story:—Some years ago, while drawing wood to town on a rainy day. He got stuck with a heavy load at the foot of Blackwood's hill and the team he had being daisies to draw, he put them down to business. The horses pulled and the traces commenced to stretch, and the traces walked up the hill with ease, the traces continued to stretch until they got to the Lisgar House corner, where he unharnessed the horses and threw the harness over a post, fed the horses and had dinner. The sun came out in the mean time and shrunk the traces, and when the farmer went out he was surprised to find the load of wood at the door.—St. Thomas Journal.

Booth vs. Booth

MONDAY, April 29.—The case of Booth v. Booth occupied the attention of the court from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. Emily Booth sued her husband, Jonathan Booth, for alimony. The defendant is well known in Haldimand county. He used to run a hotel, and is the owner of the Ardross farm near Caledonia, where the family lived. Mr. and Mrs. Booth could not live peaceably together and they separated. Mrs. Booth sued for alimony. The plaintiff, before the case was opened, made an offer in writing through his solicitor to sell all his property and divide the proceeds equally between himself and his wife. This offer was declined. The plaintiff swore that the defendant had ill-treated her by swearing at her and striking her. This evidence, so far as the swearing and bad language, was corroborated by Mrs. Booth's two daughters, who, however, never saw their father strike their mother. The defendant, denied striking, admitted having used bad language, but claimed that he had used it under provocation. Several of the neighbors swore that they had not been aware of any ill-treatment of the plaintiff by the defendant. The judge gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant had been guilty of such cruelty as to entitle the plaintiff to live apart from him and receive alimony from him; the amount of the alimony to be fixed by the master in Hamilton; the defendant to pay all the plaintiff's costs in this suit. The defendant will appeal against this judgment. Nesbitt & Bicknell for plaintiff; Furlong & Beasley for defendant.—Spectator.

Simcoe Methodists.

LETTER FROM REV. THOMAS COLLING CRITICISING A PRESS DESPATCH.

TO THE EDITOR:—In your press despatch from Simcoe of Saturday anent the Layman's Convention, Mr. Ellis, who I see furnished the item, names me personally as having threatened him "with legal action in case the Convention was held in the church." This is a statement so serious that I am compelled to give the whole of the circumstances of the case to the public. The fact is, Mr. Ellis, though residing in another town, and therefore having no local claim, appointed the meeting to be held in the church here without even asking the Trustee Board or Minister. The first intimation I had of the meeting was a request through the mail to announce from the pulpit on Sabbath the holding of the Convention in the church the following Thursday. Becoming at once aware of intense opposition to its being held by those worshipping in the church, some of whom the most liberal contributors to its erection, and apprehensive of great bitterness that would be engendered, I wrote to Mr. Ellis setting forth my conscientious convictions and protesting against the Convention being held in the church in opposition to the wish of the congregation. To do otherwise would on my part have been recreancy to a sacred trust. It is certainly putting an extreme interpretation upon a frank statement, which my letter contained, of the present legal position of the church and the legal action involved by the proposed step, to publish it throughout the country as a "threat" on my part. Such a thought was not by me entertained, but on the contrary, I strongly affirmed that I was not actuated by personal feeling at all, nor was it my desire to oppose a meeting held by my brethren to discuss the economy of our church that the course had been taken, but solely for the peace and prosperity of the cause of God. Simcoe, April 19. THOMAS COLLING.

We clip the above from the Globe of May 1st, 1889.
