A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

A Telegraph Operator Clubbed With a Cordwood Stick

TWO GLANFORD MEN ARRESTED.

A terrible affair occurred at Glanford on the usually quiet station at Glanford on the Northern branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, six or seven miles from Hamilton on Friday night last. A special train consisting of a baggage car and two coaches was run south to accommodate the people who had gone to Hamilton to attend Barnum's circus. The train left Hamilton at 10.45 o'clock. It was in charge of Conductor Stephen Clark, and there were also on the train brakeman Michael McTague and Baggage-man Chas. Clark, son of the conductor. The two cars were pretty well crowded, and among the passengers were a lot of half drunken young men. The train hands had all they could do to keep and sort of order on the train at all. The half drunken young fellows became boisterous as soon as the train got on the mountain ascent. They kept up a howling noise, and when the conductor and brakeman interfered they became abusive. Brakeman McTague was struck several times, and he heard one fellow say, "Wait till we get to Glanford and we'll kill him." When Glanford was reached McTague had his eyes open. He was standing just outside the door on the platform, and the man who had threatened him was close by. Suddenly the fellow wheeled around and struck McTague on the face near the left eye. The brakeman gave the tough a blow with his lantern and sent him off the train which had come to a stand. The drunken toughs seemed to belong near Glanford, for three of the worst of them got off the train and continued the row on the platform. Conductor Clark and his son did all they could to preserve peace, but the fellows were bound on having a fight. Young Clark was struck by a mate of the fellow who had struck McTague. He called for help and McTague went to his assistance. The assailant ran away and McTague followed, but the former ran behind a wood pile and McTague returned to see what was going on on the platform. "After I had worked my way through the crowd," McTague said next morning, "I saw a club or stick of wood fall and then I saw a young man fall to the ground. I could not see who struck the blow, but am of the opinion that it was the man that I chased behind the woodpile, for I was afterwards told that the same man was seen running away from the man who was struck." The unfortunate young man who got the blow was Reuben Shoup, a telegraph operator on night duty at the M. C. R. station at Hagersville. He was found to have received a blow on the forehead. Conductor Clark and the engineer, Ed. Williams, got the young man on the train and took him to Caledonia, having previously sent a message to Dr. Forbes, of Caledonia, to be at the station. The doctor was on hand, and it was fortunate that he was for it is doubtful if Shoup would have lived long if aid had not been at hand. His head was swelling, his eyes bulged out and he was covered with blood. Dr. Forbes immediately pressed a large quantity of matter out of the wound and did all he possibly could to help the young man. Shoup was then taken to Hagersville and conveyed to his home, a physician having previously been sent for. Immediately after the deadly blow had been struck Conductor Clark and his son secured one of the fellows who had caused the trouble. They roped him hand and foot and took him to Hagersville, where he was handed over to the police authorities. His name is William Vaughan. The others of the crowd escaped, but on Saturday morning a young man named John Moore, residing a couple of miles from Glanford station, was arrested. It is alleged that he is the man who struck the blow. He was arrested by Constables Almas, of Hagersville, and Young, of Caledonia. Conductor Clark and baggage-man McTague saw Shoup on the train. They both say he was quiet and orderly and had nothing to do with the row. When Glanford was reached he got off and stood on the platform looking at what was going on. It is the belief that whoever struck him rushed out from behind the wood-pile and dealt the blow before Shoup knew that he was being attacked. Conductor Clark said the crowd was the worst he ever carried. It was impossible to do anything with the drunken portion of it. The whole row at Glanford Station, however, lasted only two or three minutes. Engineer Williams said he never had so much trouble getting his train along. The brakes were being interfered with every few minutes and so was the bell rope. Moore, who is supposed to be the man who struck Shoup, is about thirty years old and is a big, powerful fellow, about 5 feet 9 inches in height and weighing perhaps 175 pounds.

William Vaughan and John Moore have been sent to Cayuga jail to await trial. Moore admits that it was he who struck Shoup, but says he had no intention of striking so hard a blow. Though the crime for which Moore is held was committed in Wentworth county, it is probable he will be tried at Cayuga. There is a special statute covering offences committed on railways which enables the company to take a prisoner anywhere on its line for trial. County Crown Attorney Crear has not been notified in the matter yet.

Shoup's wound proved to be a severe one, breaking into the skull and forcing the broken bone into the brain. Dr. Forbes accompanied him from Caledonia to his home in Hagersville, and with Dr. McDonald, performed the operation of trepanning the skull and raising the bone of the brain. Shoup is still alive and is reported as being somewhat better, and his case more hopeful. The doctors express some hope of recovery if inflammation can be prevented.

Hamilton the Beautiful With Its Surrounding Scenery.

Awake, O, muse! and give me power to chant one magic strain,
While here I wander for an hour o'er hill and dale and plain;
The sun is rising in the east, the clouds are tinged with gold,
Oh, how delightful is the feast! 'Tis glorious to behold!

Nature in one resplendent scene now bursts upon the sight,
The sparkling dew drops melt away before the growing light,
Rich flowers are scattered o'er the plain, yielding their fragrance there—
A sweet ambrosial perfume, which permeates the air.

And all along the mountain side fresh beauties meet the eye;
Here broad inclines of living green; there fruitful valleys lie,
While farther on the time-worn crags jut out with angry frown,
Eager to quit the earth's firm grasp and tumble headlong down.

But list! I hear a babbling sound, a welling fountain's infant song,
A tiny streamlet's new born voice, which murmurs all day long,
I kneel beside the gurgling spring to taste the water free,
More pure than mortals ever brewed, and sweeter far to me.

Now high upon the mountain's brow, enshrouded and mute I stand,
To view the landscape stretching wide, the work of nature's hand;
I see the hills that rise afar, the vales that sleep below,
The streams that winds through verdant meads, enlarging as they go.

Here 'neath my feet wild healing herbs in rich luxuriance grow,
Here aching bows extending meet, and branches bending low;
The birds are warbling 'mid the leaves, they chant a morning strain,
They carol to the rising sun, and hail the day again.

But now a sight sublimer still arrests the ravished eye,
Rocks upon endless rocks are piled with torrents battling high;
Into the caverns deep beneath a flood its torrent pours,
And thundering on the rocks below with mocking fury roars.

Still the beauties city sleeps, wrapped in the morning's dreamy hours;
Its busy pulse is still at rest, like whispering winns in leafy bowers;
Along wide avenues and streets, tall trees like giants rise,
While turrets, domes and lofty spires rise towering to the skies.

Beyond I see the shining bay, its waters lulled to rest,
While here and there a snowy sail is borne upon its breast;
Let Italy tell her fairy tales of streams and groves and flowers—
We boast as great on all sides round this Hamilton of ours. —W. F. STUART.
