> 5. As to what measures might improve m tters I cannot suggest any thing re lly precticable. The great obst cle to planting on a scale that would be of any use is the fence question. To keep the fences up in the usual orthodox 10 acre-field f shion is quite a perplexing problem to the farmer to-day, so we can hardly be expected to build in extra fence from one hundred and fifty to three hundred rods long to protect a lot of trees that may never do us any good in the way of putting anything into our pockets, and I am sorry to s y that is the way most of us look at it. I have no doubt it would be more profitable every way if we would quit pasturing and do away with our fences altogether, but this a consumation, though devoutly to be wished for, yet a long way off in the future. Our government might make it compulsory to plant a few acres and assist us in the way of fencing but this is hardly practicable, we are governed a little too much now. Some little thing however each one of us might do, we could plant a few hundred evergreens around our houses and barns, which, besides adorning our homes and making the landse pe a thing of beauty and a joy forever, would naturally add to our comfort, and our children after us would rise up and call us blessed. Yours truly,

JAMES WILLIAMSON.

New York Ledger.

Christmas number. New York: Rob ert Bonner's Sons.

The Christmas issue of the New York Ledger is a souvenir worthy of the source from whence it emanates. It contains a choice selection of articles by John Jones and James L. Jones. George Bancroft, Margaret Deland, James Russel Lowell and others, who would certainly wear the "palm-embroidered coat" were there an American academy of "immortals."

The veteran historiographer contributes to this periodical the second of his papers on "Oliver Hazard Perry and the Battle of Lake Erie," portraying with rare ability incidents of the carnage and the fate of the flagship. The sentiment expressed in "My Brook" places Mr. Lowell on a plane with Mr. Ruskin regarding the want of poetry implied by the flourishing era of manufactures.
