SOME FUNNY DEMANDS.

There's a broadly humorous side to the book trade, says London Tit-Bits. The fun is generally furnished by the ridiculous mistakes people make in the names of books. A lady sent her maid one day for Annie Thomas' novel of "He Cometh Not, She Said," but the damsel asked for Combeth Not His Head."

The little boy of a prominent divine went to a shop to procure for his father a religious book called "The Hour Which Cometh," but he inquired for "The Hen Which Crow-

Princess Alexander's Busy Life.

The Princess of Wales is one of the ousiest women in the world, says the Chicago Post, compared to whom the wife of a day laborer has leisure. When her daughters were in the school-room, punctually at 9 o'clock every morning she went into the school-room with the teachers and masters to examine the work of the previous day, and now that they are in society she personally supervises their gowns, designing and working on them herself, as she is a skilled dressmaker. Besides her own arduous public duties and those she has to perform for the Queen, she undertakes a large correspondence with her brothers, sisters and parents. So numerous are her calls of duty, and pleasure which frequently takes the form of duty, that when in London this royal lady, who is never expected to button her own boots or curl her royal hair, cannot get her work done to retire earlier than 2 o'clock in the morning.

"Mother Goose."

"Mother Goose" was a real character, and not an imaginary personage, as has been supposed. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Foster, and she was born in 1665. She married Isaac Goose in 1693, and a few years after became a member of Old South Church, Boston, and died in 1757, aged 92 years. The first edition of her songs, which were originally sung to her grandchildren, was published in Boston in 1716 by her son-in-law, Thomas Fleet. The house in which a great part of her life was spent was a low, onestory building, with dormer windows and a red-tiled roof, looking something like an old English country cottage.
