When I Was On The Farm. Robert W. Burns in Chicago Post. I often think of days gone by, When I was on the farm; Oh! how I used to like to lie, When I was on the farm;

About the independent life, The farmer's glad, exultant wife, The freedom from all cares and strife When I was on the farm.

The merry milkmaid was a joke, When I was on the farm; The hired man was always broke, When I was on the farm.

Although the sunsets were sublime, We never got the rain in time, Potato bugs were feeling prime, When I was on the farm.

The honest farmer had his day, When I was on the farm; And while the sun shone, made his hay, When I was on the farm;

He never lied about his lard, Three feet of sausage made a yard, His apples mellow, butter hard, When I was on the farm.

I never hanker for the day When I was on the farm; Nor for its repetition pray, When I was on the farm;

I often think of eggs fresh laid, And of the rosy farmer maid, But, "hang it all," it never paid, When I was on the farm.
