PLAYTIME STORIES.

BRAVE DONALD. George and Sammy were sitting on the back doorsteps with Donald, their city cousin who had come to visit them. Donald was showing them just how his fine new rifle worked and telling some wonderful shooting tales. He liked to see the boys open their eyes in astonishment, and he began to tell what great things he could do.

"Let's go down to the woods and hunt for wild animals," he said as he jumped up. "I would like to kill a lion or a bear."

'There aren't any liens or bears in our woods," said the boys. "Aren't there any wolves or wildcats, maybe?" asked Donned.
"No," the boys couldn't think of any wild things in their woods, except the wild flowers that blossomed

"Aren't there any old animals on this farm that need killing," asked

"Why yes," cried Sammy, mother wants the old setting hen killed. You can shoot her."

From a lion to a hen was quite a come down, but it was better than nothing; so they started for the barn.

The old ban's nest was under the stairs in the durk, so, Donald began to poke around with the rifle to find out if she were there. The old hen didn't like this at all, and began to flutter and cackle and flew right up into Donald's free.
Then, what, do you think this brave hunter did? He tarew down his ride and started to run to the house, crys ing and screaming for his mother. And George and Sammy wondered what he would have done if he had' met a lion or a bear.

And we simply dote on the funniest of little sashes and girdles.

A CONDUCTOR ON THE JOB.

How to Run a Street Car With Comfort for All and Without Delay.

Some street car conductors don't care, ome take an interest; some make their pasengers and themselves miserable and delay traffic; some are helpful to their passengers, while at the same time they expedite traffie. In this last class was a conductor whe was running a cross seat open car. Some conductors on such a car stand on the footboard with a hand on the bell-cord, saying sharply: "Step lively now, please, step lively," this for instance to a bunch of harried looking people standing on the ground, or maybe running along the ground at the car's side, vainly looking for a place where they can squeeze into seat. General irritation here, on the part of those wanting to get aboard and on the conductor's part, and also delay. Now see the way things are done by the conductor on the job.

As this coolheaded and capable confuctor walks along back and forth on the footboard collecting fares he takes note of every cross seat and carries it as it is at the moment in his mind, and when somebody halts the car to get aboard this conductor knows what to do with him, just where to place him if the newcomer doesn't know himself. Now the alert conductor says "Seats forward," or he may say "One in the rear," or wherever seats or a seat may be; and he speaks it with a calm certainty that inspires confidence. The man looking turns instantly in the direction indicated, and there he finds a seat and promptly he steps aboard and clang goes the bell and the car rolls on its way, with no running back and forth in confusion, with everybody pleased and satisfied. Refreshing person to meet, the ecol, efficient conductor on the job.

Oh, Those Women!

The Duchess of Consught is a charm ing and kindly woman. But she has a keen sense of what is due to her royal rank, and when at the coronation durbar at Delhi, the late lindy Curzon, as wife of the viceroy, was put beside her in such a way as to convey the impression of equality of rank she deliberately, in the sight of all the assembled vassal rulers and leudatory princes of India, allower her handkerchief to drop to the ground for Lady Curzon to pick up.

Lady Curzon, who was Miss Mary Lefter, of Washington and Chicago, thoroughly understood the object of the duchess. For the latter already had given signs of displeasure at being relegated to a place in line with the viceroy's wife instead of preceding her.

There was a momentary hesitation on the part of Lady Curzon when the handkerchief dropped, and both women looked at one another, not in an altogether particularly friendly manner. Then Lady Curzon bent down and picked up the handkerchief from the ground and handed it to the duchess, the deep flush, succeeded by an intense pallor, plainly indicating how she felt about the mat-

Fortunes in Flowers.

In the Channel Islands it is estimated that an acre of daffodils should yield over 500,000 flowers, and if they fetch three halfpence a dozen—they often fetch considerably more—the gross value of the crop would be over £260. Though English growers, coming later into the market, must be content with a lower price, there should still remain a very handsome profit. THE TORONTO LOAF. (Toronto Globe.)

The question to be decided by the Toronto Magistrate is whether a loaf dirided into four parts is a loaf or four loaves. A decision on the point has already been given in St. Thomas to the effect that the divided loaf is one leaf and subject to the law in that regard. If the Toronto decision ignores this and is different it will cover only the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and there will be different interpretations in different counties. This will necessitate a new act closing the loop-hole.
