The Vacant Chair.

Rev. D. M. Buchanan took for his text last Sunday evening I. Samuel 20: 18—"Thou shalt be missed because thy seat will be empty."

The banquet is spread. Around that table sits King Saul with his son Jonathan and with other royal guests. But one chair is vacant, David is missed because his seat is empty, and the voice of that vacant chair is heard above all others in that banquet. In how many of our homes there is a vacant chair, and how eloquently do these chairs speak. They tell of separations, of sorrowing hearts, of broken friendships of sad farewells.

"There is no fireside, howsoever defended, but has one vacant chair."

Let me speak first of chairs vacated by removals from the home. It has often been said that the happiest time in the history of a family is when they are growing up together around the family hearth. But a few years roll by and what a change is seen. One by one they have left the family circle and have gone out to face life's battle in new spheres and in new relationships.

"They grew in beauty side by side, They filled one house with glee, Their graves are severed far and wide. By mountain, stream and sea."

Thus they grow and thus they scatter till the parental home has lost its life, its huzzas, its joys. The aged couple, still spared, can tell you the memories of the vacant chair. The first to leave the home was, perchance, the eldest son. He went to college or to learn a trade, or to earn a living for himself in some new sphere. There was the affectionate parting, rendered doubly so in that it marked a new era in the history of the home. Besides the feeling of loneliness, there circled around his vacant chair many anxious thoughts as to his future well-being, for many a young man, when deprived of parental influence, has gone down before the storm of the world's temptations. It seems as if a thousand devils ply their seductive art to catch a young man when he first leaves his home. Satan knows that a life, possessed of great possibilities of usefulness, can be ruined if that young man can only be induced to enter the path of the libertine or toy with the drunkard's cup, or toss the gambler's dice. "Trip him; trip him," is the command from Hell. The only infallible safeguard to a young man in the perils of such a crisis is salvation—the grace of God in the heart. How can Godly parents strive to bring their children to Christ before the day comes when they'll be called to gaze upon their vacant chair. Young men can cheer the lonely hearts that are left behind by writing home often and telling of their successes. Reports of good conduct and faithfulness to duty will brighten the memories of that vacant chair.

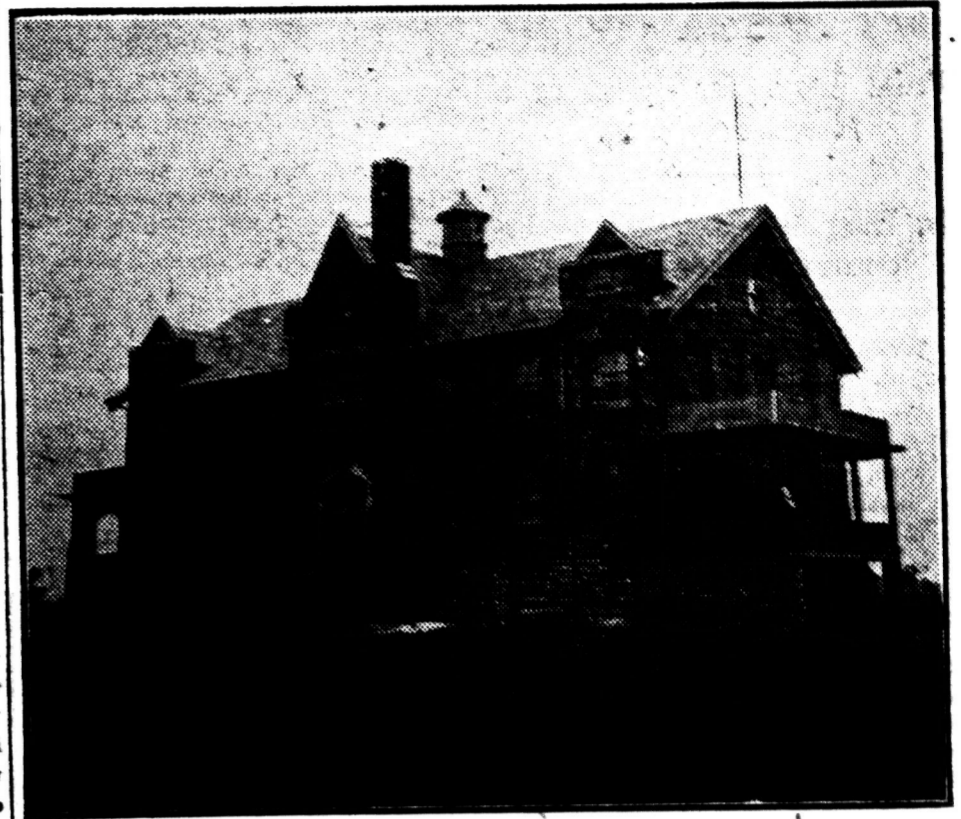

I see the daughter's vacant chair. There has been hurry and bustle in the house for weeks. The guests are invited the wedding bells are ringing, and, on the arm of her father she is led to the bridal altar. That night she leaves her parental home a bride, to grace and cheer a new home. Next day she is missed because her seat is empty. Young woman remember the lonely mother that has toiled for you, and never become a stranger to your father's home.

In some homes there is the prodigal's vacant chair. It is always a sad one. A bitter quarrel and an implacable spirit have caused the separation. There is a right and a wrong way for parents to treat their prodigal boy. It is never right to disown him and to do as some have done, efface his name out of the family record in the family Bible. There should be the forgiving spirit that will forget the past and pray for better things. Let that vacant chair ever remind you to pray for your wandering boy.

Let us in the next place consider chairs vacated by death. The ruthless hand of death has entered the home and taken away a loved one and there is left the aching heart, the weeping eyes, the vacant chair. It may be the father's chair we see. In the noontide or evening of life the call came. If at noontide, then the toiling mother and helpless children mourn around the vacant chair. If in old age, the feeble step is missed, the saintly look is gone, the old arm chair is empty. It speaks of struggles for the home, of kind words and faithful admonitions.

But perchance it is the rocking chair where mother used to sit, that is vacant now. It is old and worn for on it she sang her lullabys and rocked, with matchless patience, her weeping children to rest. Around that vacant chair circle hallowed memories of a sympathetic heart, of loving hands, of tender words, of the saddest farewell. Other vacant chairs, such as that of the little child, the invalid, the statesman, the physician, the philanthropist and the minister, speak to us in words too forcible for human lips. But let us in conclusion seek to interpret the language of all these chairs.

They tell us that there is no bond of

The picnic of the W. A. and A. Y. P. A. held at Mr. John Hair's on Tuesday of last week, was a very enjoyable affair. The members and friends, between thirty and forty in number spent an exceedingly pleasant afternoon. The day was an ideal one and the hosts and hostesses, Mr. and Mrs. John Hair, and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Hair did their utmost to make the picnic a success. A sumptuous tea, which all joined in providing, was served. After this Canon Belt, in the name of the Woman's Auxiliary, thanked Mr. and Mrs. Hair and asked the latter to accept a cup and saucer as a slight memento of the afternoon's proceedings. It is hoped to make this picnic an annual affair.
