Municipal Council and Local Option

To the Jarvis Record.

Dear Editor.

As a sympathizer of Municipal Councils (having served many years in that capacity) after reading the criticism in your esteemed journal of last week, on the acts of your Council, regarding the Local Option proposed By-Law, in justice to the Council I feel like saying a few words. In the first place, as a rule (with very few exceptions) a Municipal Council try to do the best they can for the interest of the Municipality as a whole. They very seldom get credit for the good done, but stand as a target for the arrows of the fault finders. In all cases when a question of law is involved, the nearer the Council respect the same the better. Where the word SHALL appear in the Municipal law, no peason need have any scruples, as to the acts of the Council, but when the word MAY is used, the Council have a perfect right to use their judgment and if necessary, consult one with the other, and also with their Solicitor, if they are not sure on a point of law. A specialist is usually most successful in the work he devotes himself to, than that what is termed an all round man, at the same time he would not make a good Councillor.

Specialists are frequently called cranks well cranks are indespensable for grindstones and fanning mills, the one to put on the cutting edge, the other to separate the wheat from the chaff. Failure with the Local Option Crank in this case appears, that he got tired turning the crank before the work was accomplished and then asked some other power to complete the job. I am informed the petition lacked 6 names to cover the 25% needed. It would have been wiser to had as many more. The Council acted within the law, and are justified. If 25% cannot be forthcoming on the petition, the deduction is the 3-5 vote can not be obtained, then why put the municipality to the expense of an election.

Local Option Law is no farce, in which the will of the petitioners and the Electrate are prevented by a handful of men called Councillors, to enjoy. The petitioner complying with his part of the act, the Council SHALL comply with their part, and the Electrate trot out the 3-5 vote and your Town is dry, if you keep out the blind pigs, which by the way will do as much damage to a potato patch as one with eyes.

Yours truly
J. W. HOLMES, Ex-Councillor

A Dollar's Worth That is Worth While

Few papers on the continent hold the place in the confidence and respect of the people that the Weekly Globe and Canada Farmer, with its Illustrated Magazine Section, does to-day. For threescore and seven years it has been accorded the foremost place among the metropolitan weeklies of Canada. Not satisfied with this, the enterprising management that has made The Daily Globe one of the leading newspapers on the continent has increased the size of the Weekly Globe and Canada Farmer, and added several new writers to the staff in order that it may keep pace with progressive spirit that is permeating our urban and rural population. The mail service and great distances make it almost impossible for a large portion of the people to get the benefit of the splendidly equipped news and telegraphic service of The Daily Globe. By this addition to the staff and enlargement of the paper the management of the Weekly Globe and Canada Farmer hope to compensate those who must be satisfied with a paper once a week by giving them all the week's news in a brief and comprehensive form, thereby increasing the paper's usefulness, interest and educative value.

In order to get more people acquainted with it in its new form the publishers of the Weekly Globe and Canada Farmer are giving those who subscribe for one year before the 31st of December, 1911, a copy of "Daddy's Girl," which was described in these columns last week. A sample copy of this beautiful picture may be seen at this office, and arrangements made for your subscription.

Adhesive Tape indispeneable in offices, library and household, for mending bills, music, books, drawings and paper of every description. —The Record.

Courtesy in the Home

We have cordial thoughts for the stranger
And smiles for the sometimes guest,
But for one's own the bitter tone
Though we loved our own the best.

Too often it is our own who serves us and sacrifice for our comforts, who receive so little thought or kindness. All the ugly moods are reserved for the home people, and the cheery "good morning" and polite "Thank you" are too seldom heard. Too often we take it for granted that they know we care, but when the loved one has passed away we wish we had the assurance that they did know, and it is indeed the things that we leave undone that gives us the heartache. The home should be a haven of rest, where we could lay aside all worries and cares and each member should try to cheer and help the others; but this is not often the case, but instead the petty jealousies and spites are aired, and nowhere else is there so much selfishness shown, while to the stranger and outsider we turn the smiling and obliging ways. It is said that nowhere else is there more frankness than between one's own people, but sometimes this frankness amounts almost to brutality, where one is sensitive over any failing that he is powerless to correct. How much tender thought and consideration should be given to the afflicted ones in the home, but this is often given only when before others, and how cruelly it hurts these unfortunate ones. One never gets over the loss of a sense even in dreams, and one is always sensitive over this, and it is one's own people's place to make the afflicted one forget his trouble as much as possible. The true definition of home is not a house where a few people dwell, but a place where peace should dwell and where all heartaches should be cured, and where everyone has every consideration for the other's rights, and in such a place as this there will be homliness, but no vain regrets of the might have been, when one member leaves for the home above.

Veterans' Day

Tuesday, Nov. 28th, 1191, was a red letter day for the Veterans of 1866, for on that day at 10:20 a.m., in a downpour of rain, they, to the number of 150, (your humble servant being one of them) paraded on the south side of King Street, opposite Government, Toronto. In a few minutes we were escorted to the South porch of the Government House, where we were sheltered from the rain, which was descending in torrents, (but notwithstanding that hundreds of citizens filled the streets.) In about ten minutes an officer came and said we were to go into the Vice-Regal residence, which we did by eastern entrance (which was beautifully festooned with purple bunting.) We were then conducted through large and beautifully furnished rooms, all abaze with electric lights, to the Conservatory where we lined up in single file. In a few minutes the Royal Party came in and His Royal Highness spoke to our President, who returned the salutation and then commenced to read a copy of the address that had been prepared to present to His Royal Highness. After the address had been read and the original presented to the Duke, His Royal Highness said, "It afford me great pleasure to meet the Veterans of 1866, who went forth at the call of the country to drive back an armed mob, many of them trained men, being Veterans of the American Civil War. A number of your comrades laid down their lives (which you all were willing to do if necessity called for the sacrafice) for their country's protection. Again, I say, that I cannot adequately express my feelings of pleasure in meeting the men whom my mother delighted to honor." (We all were medals having the image of our late beloved Queen stamped thereon.)

When His Royal Highness ceased speaking, I supposed all was ended, but I was mistaken for the Duke extended his hand to our President and said a few words and then to the next and so on until he had shaken hands with every veteran present and spoken a few words to each. Immediately after the Duke came Her Royal Highness, the Duchess, and Lady Gibson, and Lieut. Governor Gibson, all of whom spoke to each veteran and shook hands. I do not know what the Duke said to my comrades but I have a distinct remembrance of what he said to me. When he arrived opposite me and extended his hand, I put my hand out which he immediately grasped in a firm, friendly grip, (which he retained until through speaking to me) and said "it gives me great pleasure to meet you," to which I replied, "not any more pleasure Your Royal Highness than I feel in meeting you." He said a few more words and passed on. Her Royal Highness had then arrived opposite me and spoke to me. What she said I do not know, for my assurance had nearly vanished. I, however, managed to bow my thanks. Lieut.-Gov. and Lady Gibson were then opposite me. I extended my hand and said "Am glad to see you Colonel." He grasped my hand and said "I am pleased to meet you." (I had met him when I resided in Hamilton.) We then went out by the north door, and so ended a day that will be a pleasant memory to all the veterans that were present as long as life and sense remains. My impression of His Royal Highness is that he meant all he said and when he grasped my hand I could see interest and kindness beaming in his eyes and depicted in every lineament of his very handsome features. As to Her Royal Highness when she spoke to me, I was too bashful (you know that is one of my failings) to look her squarely in the face, so I cannot give a very good description of Her Royal Highness, but what I did manage to observe was a fairly pretty lady with kindness stamped on every feature. In conclusion I think Their Royal Highness captured all the hearts of Toronto and especially of the veterans of 1866.
