Backbone vs. Wishbone

There is a wide difference between a backbone and a wishbone. The backbone is the backbone of a man, and the wishbone is the wishbone of a man. The backbone is the backbone of a man, and the wishbone is the wishbone of a man. The backbone is the backbone of a man, and the wishbone is the wishbone of a man.

THE OLD RELIABLE

Christmas

For more than fifteen hundred years Christmas has been celebrated; for more than fifteen hundred years it has been promoting the peace and happiness of the world. We, in this twentieth century cannot doubt how much Christmas has done for us. What are we doing for Christmas? How many of us are like to give an honest answer to that question?

The day when Joseph, the poor carpenter, went up to Bethlehem with Mary to be taxed; that day when the virgin Mary gave birth to the Child in a stall and cradled Him in a manger, "because there was no room for them in the inn"; that day with the simple and imperishable history that is the loftiest lesson in humility that the world has ever received—how do we now observe its anniversary?

We think perhaps a little more about our food than usual. If the weather is bad, we grumble, and wish that Christmas came at some more pleasant season of the year. If the weather is good, we are perhaps so busy with our sports and games and newly acquired gifts that we do not find time to refresh our consciences of the debt we owe to Christmas and of its poignant lesson in humility. We may even have got so far away from that lesson that we have made gifts under a sense of obligation, with a wish not to be thought niggardly, rather than from the pure motive of generous affection. Our preparations for the day have been characterized by hurry and worry and our celebration of the day is likely to be accompanied by some complacent contemplation of the pomp and vanities within our sphere. Between such an observance of Christmas and Mary's quiet acceptance of a strange contrivance there is certainly a wide difference. But if no one who thinks about Christmas can escape some self-chastisement at the thought, there are nevertheless redeeming facts on which it is reassuring to dwell.

The beautiful thing about Christmas is that whatever it does and has done for us we cannot help, insensibly and by the very nature of the day, doing something for it. A man does not give in a Christian community without feeling on Christmas there is a kindly spirit abroad, without sharing in that kindly spirit himself. The Christmas season is one when the relations of men and of nations are touched with human friendliness, when concessions come easier, when pleasant things are said, when the whole Christian world, with all our forgetfulness, with all our insincerities, we cannot help doing something in the spirit of Christmas, simply because of the wonderful vitality of that spirit.

Really Dumb

There are still people in the world who regard the horse as a living animated machine, created solely for the use of man and having no rights of its own. That is largely because the horse is in the fullest sense of a dumb animal. If you strike a dog, he yelps, if you step on the tail of a cat, she screams. A horse, on the other hand, may be beaten almost to death and whinnying but it is only in his death agony that his suffering finds audible expression, and frequently not even then. It is this pathetic silence, this inability of the horse to give utterance to his pain, that causes so many persons to ignore his sufferings. They have no imagination, they have no sympathy, they have no sense of the indignities which he endures for a day. The change in the treatment of horses would be instant and enduring. Take, for example, navicular disease, from which many horses suffer. It attacks one of the bones of the forefoot. The horse decays just as the human tooth decays. Imagine the suffering of a horse obliged to walk on a foot in that condition! Some forms of spavin are so painful that a horse afflicted with them becomes thin, even if he is generously fed and does not work. The trouble may, indeed be recognized by this peculiar emaciation—a thinness about the waist or loins so excessive that it sometimes seems as if a small handkerchief would span the animal in front of the hips. But although the horse does not speak or cry out, he tells his story plainly enough to those who can understand it. It is his eye that speaks. When he suffers, his eye is contracted, and has a nervous, hurried, restless expression, indescribable, yet readily recognized. When he is comfortable, his eye seems large and full, and has a quiet and serene look, and if he is petted, an arch look, the expression of fun and mischief. From a stableful of work-horses an expert will select, by the expression of their eyes alone, the horses that have good drivers and those that have cruel ones. That the ears of the horse also express his emotion is too well known to need more than a reference. When he is unhappy, ill-treated or neglected, his ears have back-washed or are in those that are abused. The vocabulary of the horse is limited, but its limitations are the same as those of our inadequate speech; on the one hand pleasure, on the other pain. It is a heartless person that will not try to learn it, a dull one that cannot succeed.

Country Girls

"If I were in search of a wife," said a happily married man, "I should go to the country for her. You cannot find anywhere a town so small that it does not contain young women of education, refinement and sensitive personality. The young men whom they would naturally have married have gone to the city. The marriage chances of the girls are therefore reduced in number and limited in kind. No women in the world are better fitted to make good wives, yet many of them remain unmarried."

Any discerning person of middle age will testify to the truth of this observation. Far more than the country, the city represents extremes of circumstances, wealth on one hand, poverty on the other. Those extremes are sharply reflected in the training of young women. The daughters of the rich have no need, the daughters of the poor no time, to learn the art of house-keeping and homemaking. One girl is required to do no work at all; the other must occupy herself outside her home at something that will bring in money.

On the other hand, the country is full of families neither rich nor poor, whose daughters have attended good schools, have had leisure to become familiar with the best art and music and literature, have acquired the polish that comes from contact with the world, and then have returned to practise the excellent profession of housewifery in their own homes, where they learned it.

The girl of this class brings to her husband a dowry much more valuable than money. In the simple atmosphere of the country she learns poise and judgment. She gives more and asks less than the girl who craves the constant excitement of the bargain counter and the martine. Having always centred her interests in her home, she finds it natural and satisfying to center them, after marriage, in the home that her husband provides for her.

In material ways, the city offers tempting rewards to energetic, intelligent youth, but in the matter of homemaking the country does not suffer in comparison. In respect of marriage, propinquity may be a good explanation, but it is a poor excuse.

Smile Cure

A complete nervous wreck may be too far gone to get any benefit from the "smile cure" that has brought relief to so many, but it is worth trying at any rate. The very suggestion of a smile for curing frayed nerves ought to bring a hearty laugh from the patient, it seems so absurd. Most persons who suffer from a nervous breakdown either take the cure at some fashionable resort devoted to the purpose or else bewail the fate which keeps their purse too "thin" for any indulgence of that nature. The "smile cure," however, is something even the affected poor can afford, so none can object to giving it a fair trial because of economic reasons. Perhaps a description of its merits had best be given in the words of a certain college professor who had experienced a nervous breakdown and on regaining his health was questioned by a friend as to the remedy.

"I went to several of the nerve specialists," he said, "and I didn't succeed in getting any help. Then I chanced I heard of a woman, not a physician, who had studied nervous diseases for years and had been very successful in treating them. Some friends persuaded me to go and see her.

"She began by making me learn to smile. You see I had got down to such depths I couldn't smile for weeks. I had lost all powers over the muscles of my face. They had become set. They not only expressed the depression I felt, but they actually added to it. 'I obeyed instructions, I went home and for half an hour I stood before the mirror I practised smiling. At first I had a hard time twisting my mouth into a smile. In spite of myself, the muscles would sag. Then I saw that the muscles were actually fighting against me. I kept on trying and at the end of half an hour I made a pretty good imitation of a smile. That exercise I continued several days till I had overcome the rigidity of those facial muscles and learned to control them. After a time I found I could smile almost at will. When I began to be depressed I would smile. At the same time I would resist the depressing thoughts. The combination of resisting and smiling would save me from falling into depression.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look up on all doctors a little better than I did. One day my boss asked me why I was not so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Mrs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got True New Varicose Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could now earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $31 and never lose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment."
