ORIGIN OF THE DOLLAR.

The world "dollar" was in our language at least 300 years ago, for it is used by Shakespeare several times. It is supposed that the word was in use in London in the latter part of the sixteenth century, having been brought in by the North German merchants, who managed the trade on the Baltic and in Russia.

"Dollar" appeared first in an English dictionary in 1745. It is a borrowed word, being the German "thaler." The coins issued by the mint in Joachimsthal were called "Joachimstalers." When other mints were established the "Joachims" was dropped and the coins were called simply "thalers."

The dollar was adopted by Congress as the unit of our currency on August 5th, 1785. It was to contain 375.64 grains of pure silver; but when the mint was established in 1792, the requirement was reduced to 371.25 grains of pure silver. The coinage of dollars began in 1794.—Harper's Weekly.

REPRESENTATIVES MEN and WOMEN WANTED

It is our abiding conviction that we have the best and most attractive line of employment now before the world. It is honest, steady, pleasant, sure and cumulative in its results, and for the same amount of effort will yield a greater return than selling real estate, pianos, life insurance, automobiles, books, or any line that at present engages the successful salesman. AGE TO THE FRONT.

(Vancouver Province.)

For several years the Gospel has been preached that the twentieth century is the century of young men. It is gradually being discovered, however, that the prime movers of the world, those on whom the world most rely for continuity of progress and stability of government, are after all men of the older generation. Not only so but the old men are proving themselves capable of taking part in the recreations and accomplishments of the young. "Too young at 60" was the sentence that stood out most prominently on a recent bill of contents of a London morning paper, the editorial page of which gave the comments of a "middle aged philosopher" assuring his readers that the recent rule of young men is passing and that the "old man triumphant" is returning to his ancient mastery of the earth.

LET'S HOPE SO.

(Montreal Herald.)

Last summer on the limpid lake
He daily rocked the boat,
He drowned a bunch of victims, but
He always kept afloat.

Last month while hunting in the woods,
He shot with frequent vim,
And slew six hunters and a guide—
But nobody shot him.

But now that winter days are here
I see some hope, and grin
To think that he'll go skating where
The ice is rather thin.

STILL "JOHNNY."

One summer when an admirable ex-Secretary of the navy was visiting his native village of Buckfield in Maine he sent some clothes to the village washerwoman, and driving by the next week in company with a Representative to Congress, stopped to ask for them. The woman turned to her assistant. "May," said she, "is Johnny's washing done yet?" -From the Christian Register.

CHINESE SINGSONG GIRLS.

Their Part at Banquets and Festivals of the Rich.

Although experts in Oriental music perceive that differences exist between the Chinese and Japanese models, to most of us the scales, progressions and cadences are much the same, and the music as a whole fails to appeal to lovers of Schumann, Chopin or Beethoven.

The singsong girl of China is first cousin to the geisha of Japan, to whom musical comedy has introduced us, to say nothing of the insight Pierre Loti has given us into this "milieu" of life in the land of chrysanthemums.

Ideas regarding the intermingling of the sexes in China have always been strict, and even to-day the wives and daughters of the host are absent from the festive board. If they have any curiosity it must be satisfied by looking at the guests through a grille or chinks in the wall, for their presence in the room is forbidden. But the respectable singsong girl, says the London Globe, is a treasured institution.

To meet her at her best you must be invited to a house where the guests are congenial spirits and of about the same rank. A birthday party or a banquet in honor of the little son is the ideal occasion. The host welcomes you and conducts you into a large apartment in which chairs and tables range the walls, on two sides being bunks or bedsteads large enough for eight people to lie upon on which are handsome opium layouts, sponges, scissors, cleaners and matches.

In the centre of the room is the tea table ready laid, while at another table for European guests, are set out champagne, sherry, whiskey, brandy and soda water.

The singsong girl occupies a throne in a corner of the saloon. One is usually allotted to each guest, but sometimes her attentions are divided between two guests. These young ladies vary in age from 15 to 30, and are chosen for their physical and artistic attractiveness.

They are beautiful from a Mongolian point of view and even from a European standpoint are by no means bad looking, with their lips and cheeks delicately tinted, their brows and necks lightly touched with powder de riz and their hair done into infinitely cunning shapes, oiled, perfumed, stiffened and adorned with astonishing pins. Diamond or jade earrings and a necklet are worn; bracelets, bangles and pade rings cover the arms, and the graceful tapering fingers are almost hidden by rings.

China is a country where the ladies do not wear the trousers in a metaphorical sense, but as an essential part of their costume. The sing song girls are habited in coat and trousers of the finest silk, satin or brocade. The former is cut very much in the style of a French ouvrier's blouse, and the latter are cylindrical, falling to the ankles, and disclosing the finest silk hosiery and the daintiest embroidered shoes.

The Oriental mind is prone to vivid colors, and the Chinese dyers recognize no fewer than 900 "tright" hues. This being so, the sing song lady has an embarrassing choice of materials for her professional garb. The coat if of one color, the collar and edging of another, and in addition the material is brocaded, painted or embroidered.

The effect of a dozen damsels, all dressed in different colors is dazzling, especially when the gentlemen vie with them in the ornateness of their rich silken robes and the banners an dtrophies on the walls are a symphony of colors in themselves. At an understood interval one of the sing song girls comes forward to play an instrumental solo. It is magnificent, but not music to Occidental ears. It is more or less a fantasia on two notes, the pitch lying at about E in the treble clef, with squeaky excursions into a higher region.

During the meal the sing song girl acts as waitress, and at its termination she sees that her particular guest has everything smokable and drinkable at his elbow before joining her fellows on the concert platform. There is usually a male orchestra to give support to the singing and add weight to the accompaniment, which the girl herself plays on the violin, mandolin or zither.

No sheet if music is unfolded, the Chinese professional singer being expected to know the words as well as the music on at least 500 ballads. There are sure to be solos, duets and trios, and here the male orchestra comes in with fine enthusiasm in accompanying the singers. The bass tomtom is constructed of a snake skin drawn over what looks like a small cider cask, and is played with a pestle like instrument of wood.

The tenor tomtom is snakeskin stretched over a ring about six inches in diameter. There being no conductor, the employment of these percussion instruments, to which are added gongs and cymbals, seems to be left to the judgment of the players, who pound on them whenever they think some sentiment in the ballad needs emphasizing or at the climax of a moving narrative.

Sometimes there is a tremendous racket in the midst of a most pathetic episode, which prevents you from gathering the meaning of the song. But custom has sanctioned these outbreaks, which are understood of the Celestials, though it is certain no western star singer would put up with them at any price.

THE UNSEEN.

Far down in the depths of the forest, under the shadows of gloomy firs, far out on the rolling prairie, springing with the grass, under the full light of the fervid sun, are fair and fragrant blossoms, budding, blossoming, fading, dying, unseen by mortal eye. In millions of homes, scattered over this wide earth of ours, are fairer human blossoms, patient, gentle, thoughtful souls, the fragrance of whose offerings wither unseen, on the steps of the altar; the fruits of whose ceaseless toil are plucked by careless hands. How sweet the thought that there is no lot so low, no care so trifling, no life so hidden, that it escapes a Father's eye! How full of comfort the knowledge that there is no bud of hope, no blossom of joy, no tendril of effort, no leaf of life, that is not fed with the sun of His love, and watered with the dew of His mercy, to the end that it may bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Von Buhler.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

STRENGTH FOR TRIALS.

To those who "wait upon the Lord" there is always given strength adequate to the trials of the day, and there ought to be no anxiety as to the trials of the morrow. They have not already in hand the grace that may be needed for future duties and dangers; but they know it to be in better keeping than their own, and certain to be furnished precisely when required. Oh, the peace which a true Christian might possess, if he would take God at His word, and trust Him to make good His promises. It is hard to say what could then ruffle him, or what, at least, could permanently disturb. Day by day his duties might be more arduous, his temptations stronger, his trials more severe. But he would ascertain that the imparted strength grew at the same rate, so that he was always equal to the duties, victorious over the temptations and sustained under the trials. Faith ought so to people all the future with the presence, the guardianship, the love, and the faithfulness of God that the soul in her journeyings and searchings should find no cause for anxiety and no ground for fear.

It is also the natural bent of some men to be straight.

5 YEARS' THROAT TROUBLE AND INFLUENZA CURED

EMINENT DOCTORS FAILED TO CURE—HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

This Case Does Prove That When Catarrhozone is Breathed Every Trace of Catarrh Disappears.

Milford Haven, Da., Nov. 10.—Everyone in this neighborhood knows of the long suffering from influenza and catarrh endured by Mrs. D. Gurney. To-day she is well. Her recovery is due entirely to Catarrhozone. That is her own statement. "I was a great sufferer from catarrh in the head, throat and nose, and endured the manifold tortures of influenza for five years. My life was despaired of. Catarrh was undermining my strength very fast. I used treatments from eminent doctors, but all failed to cure me. I had given up hope of ever being well. Then I read of a wonderful cure made by Catarrhozone. Immediately I sent for Catarrhozone, and before I had used one bottle I was greatly relieved. To-day I am cured. We would not be without Catarrhozone in our home—it's so sure in colds, coughs, bronchial and throat trouble. I feel it is my duty to publicly recommend Catarrhozone."

Get the large dollar size of Catarrhozone; it contains a beautiful hard rubber inhaler, and medicine that lasts two months. Smaller sizes, 25c. and 50c. each. Beware of imitations—accept only Catarrhozone, sold by all reliable dealers, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont., and Buffalo, N. Y.

MUSHROOMS.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

Some esteemed contemporaries have been publishing infallible rules for distinguishing mushrooms and toadstools. Some of them are incurring no slight responsibility in doing so for some of the rules given are far from safe. To begin with, the botanist does not distinguish between mushroom and toadstools, though he may distinguish between mushrooms that are poisonous and mushrooms that are edible. "Toadstool" is a name given popularly to mushrooms that are supposed to be poisonous. As a matter of fact many of the so-called toadstools are not merely quite harmless but make very good eating for those who like them. The number of these fungus growths known to be surely poisonous is, fortunately, very small; still it is foolish to take a chance. A good rule is to suspect where you do not know. There is no simple rule for separating mushrooms from toadstools if the fungus family any more than there is a simple rule for distinguishing the sheep from the goats in the human family.

NEXT!

The Garden street philosopher came home the other night. His face was smooth as satin and he looked just out of sight. The dainty scent of lilacs hung around him like a cloud; his bald spot was a-shining and he looked almightly proud.

His wife was in the hallway and she kissed him as of yore, but her sniff it breathed suspicion as he passed her through the door. "Oh, don't worry, dear" he chuckled, "I have been in no bar room and it's not to hide the whiskey that I'm scented with perfume."

And his wife said: "Oh, I know it," as she plucked a golden hair from the lapel of his rain coat which he laid upon a chair. "Yes, I know you were not drinking for you walked so straight, of course, but you'll quit those lady barbers or I'll sue for a divorce.

RECEIVED CONGRATULATIONS

The following letter has been received at Grand Trunk headquarters from a prominent land and financial agent, Edmonton:

"I must congratulate you upon the fine line of railroad which your company is building. The road between here and Winnipeg of the Grand Trunk Pacific is one of the finest that I have ever travelled on, and I understand that you propose having an exceptionally fine road through the mountains."

SORROW.

'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities,
Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God
The spirit climbs, and hath its eyes unsealed.
True is it that Death's face seems stern and cold
When he is sent to summon those we love;
But all God's angels come to us disguised;
Sorrow and sickness, poverty and death
One after other, lift their frowning masks,
And we behold the Seraph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the front of God.

—James Russell Lowell.

PROGRESS OF THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY

It is interesting to notice the progress that is being made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and for the information of the public we publish the following particulars regarding this great transcontinental railway. The lines at present in operation are as follows:

PURSE FOR THE CZAR.

A mystery for which no solution has been found during the last six or seven years is contained in this announcement in the Times:

The Imperial Russian Embassy desires to acknowledge with thangs the receipt of an anonymous donation "For a Russian child."

Making what has become a yearly visit a messenger called at the Russian Embassy, Chesham Place, on Monday, and without disclosing his identity, handed the footman a small packet addressed to the ambassador. The packet was taken in the usual way to the chancellery of the embassy and on being opened was found to contain a small leather purse, in which were a number of postal orders, to the value of 25 shillings. The packet was addressed to his Imperial Majesty the Czar of Russia, and o nthe top left hand corner was written the words "For a Russian Child." The parcel was repacked, sealed with the embassy seal and sent to the Court Chamberlain at St. Petersburg. The parcel on other occasions has been delivered in curious ways. It was sometimes found in the letter box, on the window sill or on the door step. In spite of every effort on the part of the Russian Embassy to unravel the motives underlying this little act of beneficence the mystery remains unsolved.—From the London Evening Standard.

A JUDICIAL ILLUSTRATION.

The late Judge J. B. Richardson, of Massachusetts, whose recent death at Ordway was attributed to intimidation, says the Boston Herald, had a great reputation on the bench for directness. He abhorred useless questions.

"Judge Richardson," said a Boston lawyer, smiling ruefully, "once interrupted me in what, I confess, was a too long-winded cross-examination, to tell his story.

"A furniture van stood before a house," he said, "and a line of men staggered out of the house with desks, bookcases, sofas, melodeons and what-not on their heads.

"A passer-by halted one of the men and said:

"'Are the people here moving?'

"'No, sir,' the man answered. 'We are just taking the furniture out for a drive.'"

WOOD USED FOR SHINGLES 1910.

Ten species of wood are used in the manufacture of shingles in Canada, of which cedar is the most important. Reports received by the Forestry Branch at Ottawa show that over nine-tenths of the two billion shingles produced in Canada during 1910 were of this species and that over one-half of these were western cedar cut in British Columbia. The consumption of spruce and white pine has decreased suddenly in 1910, eighty-two per cent. less of the former being made than in 1909, and scarcely one-fifth the usual amount or white pine being produced. Nova Scotia and Quebec cut most of the spruce shingles. The white pine shingles are mostly of the species Pinus monticola, and are cut in British Columbia. Nearly three million more of hemlock shingles were produced in 1910 than during the year previous, and of the total of fifteen million pieces, over nine-tenths was produced in Ontario and Quebec. The above four species furnished over ninety-eight per cent. of the wod used in the shingles. Balsam, douglas fir and jack pine, although of less importance were used in 1910 in increasing quantities and for the first time tamarack and red pine were reported as shingle wood. There were less fluctuations in the value of the species than formerly. Balsam shingles were the cheapest at $1.48 per thousand and tamarack the most expensive at $2.49.—Forestry Press Bulletin, No. 39.

THE INNOCENT ABROAD.

James Morro, day clerk at the Hotel Edward, Kansas City, Mo., encountered a "new one" a couple of mornings ago, according to the Chicago Inter-Ocean. The night before the "new one" was sprung a rural citizen from Osborne, Kansas, registered at the hostelry, and was given the only unoccupied room in the house—one with a private bath in connection with it.

The next time Morro was approached by the guest was when the latter was ready to check out.

"Well, dod you have a good night's rest?" the clerk asked.

"No, I didn't," replied the Kansan. "The room was all right and the bed was pretty good, but I couldn't sleep very much, for I was afraid some one would want to take a bath, and the only door to it was through my room."

Unique among Government "jobs" is that of the two women who sit side by side down in the basement of the Treasury Department and spend the entire day going through the contents of the department waste basket. They are searching for stray bonds, checks and bills that may through some mishap have fallen into the basket.

The positions of the two women are more important than their place on the Treasury rolls would indicate, for some time back one of them fished up a $10,000 United States coupon bond.
