Poison Ivy

It's well to avoid it. Especially when one is warm. It has easy access to open pores. Some, however, are not over sensitive to it. Others suffer from a breeze which blows over it. Botanists know it as rhus radicans (of your toxicodendron). It is said to be particularly dangerous early in the season. However, most of us give it a wide berth at any season. Some people cannot tell it from Virginia creeper, which has five leaflets, while the poison ivy has but three.

Look Out For Bogus Banknotes

Counterfeits of Canadian Government one-dollar and two-dollar notes have been put in circulation in Toronto and Hamilton and some of them may reach this county. The Toronto police have come across a few of the bad bills and are on the lookout for more of them, and for those who are sending them out. Only a few are as yet known to have been put out in Toronto, but it has been learned that quite a number have made their appearance in Hamilton. The bills are very easy to detect. They are photographic of the originals on paper of a much more inferior quality than the true notes. The greens and blacks on the etchings are not of the same strong tones as those of the originals, but appear washy, especially the greens.

Dandruff Disappears

Scalp Itch Vanishes and Hair Quickly Stops Falling.

PARISIAN Sage—remember the name when you want a good, pure hair tonic, free from dangerous lead and other dyes.

PARISIAN Sage is not a dye. Most tonics that dye the hair are full of poison and are dangerous to use.

PARISIAN Sage is a clean, delightful hair dressing that nourishes the hair roots and besides killing the dandruff germs imparts life and beauty into the hair. Your hair will look nice and brilliant after applying PARISIAN Sage and you can quickly get rid of dandruff and scalp itch and stop the hair from falling. Avoid imitations—get the genuine. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every bottle and carton. Large bottle 50 cents at T. E. Morrow's and dealers everywhere.

A gas well yield of 40,000 feet per day was struck in the heart of the residential district at A. Bixel's residence on William street Wednesday, Aug. 14th. Drilling operations will be commenced at other residences in the vicinity.

Advertising as a Guarantee

When a business concern invests a large sum of money in a handsome store and equipment for retail merchandising, the public feels a certain degree of confidence that the concern has goods worth examining. People argue that unless they had established a reputation for fair dealing and unless they had goods that they were sure to need, they would not dare spend so much money. Advertising, likewise, acts as a guarantee of substantial business character. When a firm spends money freely on this necessary form of salesmanship, the public concludes that it must have goods back of it that have demonstrated their worth, or the firm would not have set apart this sum of money for selling them through the newspapers. A concern that does not advertise impress the public as merely an experiment. The fact that it may have been in existence for many years does not help it so very much. The public may even look at mere existence for a long term of years as a disqualification indicating preference for old-time methods. It takes advertising to prove that you have confidence in your goods.

Buying Money Orders

When you buy a money order made out in favor of a mail order house, it is a knock the amount, the harder the knock. It would be useless for us to criticize the goods you get or the service etc. Every small town has mail order houses to compete with and wherever a town is cited in which the people, so called disinterested, are trading away from home, the town is a "dead one". They may have had good stores at one time but they did not support a good man, with the result he left, and the town not only lost a good citizen but felt the loss of a store which filled a place that is now vacant. Jarvis merchants have no reason to complain, as the past year's business has surpassed all previous years. Perhaps you are not one who constitutes the band of knoekers or town killers. If you are, before you buy your money order, look upon it as if you were inviting some merchant in your town to get out. If he quits business you may be the first one to feel the loss.

The Western Farmer as he is

The western farmer is not blood-esting human gatling-gun on horseback. He is a tiller of the soil. He is our blood brother who went West just a few years ago, leaving the "hardened acres" beside our own, with its spring rivulets, and its "sugar grove" and its milk house and its hay-mow, to live much the same sort of life on the virgin lands of the bountiful prairies. He is the identical peaceful husbandman he always was. He is generous of his rights, of course. That, too, he always was. He takes his customary keen interest in politics. He has shaken free from some conventions by his removal to new surroundings; and he may have taken a new look at the public issues of the day come to pay less respect to his "grandfather's" political opinions. But he is still a Canadian—and would fight to the drop of the hat against anybody who tried to make him anything else than a Canadian.

The Country Girl

"It is in the virtues of sincerity and naturalness that the country girl scores," says a writer in The Gentlewoman, contrasting the modern townbred girl with her country sister. "She thinks less about her clothes than the town maiden, but to be quite just it must be confessed that it is easier to look effective than in the town. In a plain coat and skirt and a motor cap the rosy-cheeked, Phyllida looks a 'picture' as she swings along the meadows, the blue of the sky reflected in her eyes. But remove the self-same attire in exactly the same manner, and the probability is that she will look quite dowdy. Of course, the country maiden does not commit this mistake. She is, in fact, more adaptable than her city sister, and whereas the real town girl scarcely ever adapts herself altogether to the exigencies of country life, the country girl, when she comes up for the season, is as perfectly dressed and as keen in the enjoyment of town gaieties as if the country joys did not exist for her. If she has certain shyness and modesty, it but adds to her attractiveness. Moreover, the modern young man is finding the country girl more of a 'pal' than the town girl. She does not demand so much attention as the latter, and she understands better the spirit of comradeship. The town girl is usually very exacting in the homage she expects from her cavaliers."

Alcohol the Enemy of Beauty

Miss Billie Burke, the noted actress, is writing a series of letters in several of the Canadian dailies. In one recently she dealt with the use of liquor by women. She said:—Just one word. Liquor not only ruins beauty, but kills respect. The other evening in one of the splendid restaurants of New York I saw a number of young girls, none of them over 18 or 20, having what they thought was a glorious time. There were six girls and six men somewhat older than themselves, and the girls had been drinking wine until their faces were flushed, their voices loud and strident, and their manners most noticeable. How I wanted to whisper to those thoughtless maids that if any of them wished to stand well with any of the men present she had better make some excuse and go home immediately. No man on earth wants to see the woman for whom he cares, even slightly under the influence of drink, and the man who will encourage a girl to take a drink of liquor does not care what happens to her. She is nothing to him. Nothing will steal away your good looks as will intoxicating liquor. I have a friend who is over fifty, and who when asked the other day how she retained not only her beauty, but her youthful contours and expression, answered, "In the first place, I never touch spirituous liquor." Not one young woman in the crowd about her could vie with her in appearance, and not one young woman in the crowd who did not think it necessary to occasionally at least sip a glass of wine. It was an object lesson that I am sure they will remember. Just one last word—Liquor may exhilarate for the moment, but leaves devastation in its wake.

"The inner side of every cloud is bright; I therefore turn my clouds about. And always wear them inside out, to show the lining."
