The Ethics of Modern City Building

"No joy was ever less complete for a moderate expectation." This time-worn axiom is no less applicable to the world of cold-blooded business-to-day than it is to the softer influences that are grouped under the great roof-tree of human sentiment.

It holds out a gentle warning to the ever sanguine and seeks to bridle in wholesome and not unkindly fashion those will-o'-the-wisps who have, with the best intentions in the world, outstripped all judgment in their optimistic judgment with regard to "futures."

What a story could be written of the rise and progress of Western Canada and of the hair-brained enthusiasts who have "rushed forward to certain death" for no other reason than that they could not or would not be satisfied with a "moderate expectation."

They rather than blame, however, in due to them, for certainly the prospect of these far western prairies, lit up sometimes to a dazzling splendor, the glory of the continent, has been and is at times enough to "turn the head" of the most solid and practical that ever looked out on a living prospect.

But the days of blind adventure, of feverish-headed foolishness and wild-out schemes have happily passed in so far as Canada is concerned. We have information to-day in place of the "indistinct" that pointed to the fathers of the "boom" days.

Napoleon said that the most successful men was usually the man who had the best information. Napoleon was usually right and he certainly never wrote unless he had himself experienced. He was a man of the men of whom Sir Thomas Overbury of Queen's Bench days wrote: "The man who wins the contest, between which experience and his reason, there is marriage, and the outcome are his actions."

Development in any scheme of land settlement or city building has now been worked down almost to an exact science. It can be watched and directed and its possibilities and certainties are ascertained almost with the precision by which the life insurance actuary arrives at his figures.

But just as the commercial instinct seems to be born in some men and completely foreign to the make-up of others, there are men born to business of directing the affairs of expanding populations and to dig detail as well as the comprehensive sweep of a great colonization scheme.

There are not many engagements in modern civilization that tax so severely the very best that the human brain can assimilate and evolve to the end that the judgment it shall ultimately deliver is of such a nature that it spells success; certainly that it may not in any case end in calamity or failure. It calls for enlarged business experience and uncompromising devotion to system, and watchful application and constant watchfulness of the trend of events. It means concentration on above all things, for no man can safely be entrusted with the custody of one's real estate investments who is running a confectionary store, or the details of a lunch counter as a "side line."

"A man is to one thing at a time" will sometimes do, but the man who isn't intuitively born to the business—who is not an enthusiast in this business with a fairly large inheritance of foresight—will not have much of a tombstone when he has passed in his cheques.

When an investor seeks to dispose of his funds in a way that precludes him from personally verifying all the outside ins of a prospect, he must at least be satisfied beyond all doubts as to the integrity and business ability of the men who are acting for him. There are thousands in Western Canada to-day who are riding on the very top of the greatest tide of financial success the world has ever known, who probably would not be worth the price of a winter overcoat, had it not been for the advice—probably the unappreciated opportunity—of some real estate friend.

Like the insurance man, his persistence in season and out of season could not be overcome, and just to him quiet the "victim" meekly acquiesced at last, with the result that he was pushed on to the goal that no prudence or effort of his own could have reached.

"What one man has done another can accomplish." The chances of yesterday are infinitesimal when compared with what is lying ready to hand in Western Canada to-day. And they can be secured by the old fashioned means: own nose activity.

"To act in a living present" was the habit of those men and that is the only royal road to success to-day as it was then. The causes that work towards development at a given time are an interesting study, but they have given their lives to an exact few who have given their lives to this study. And the public owes them its gratitude, because the losses, popular mind has no more the ability and disposition to dig up and weigh these things and pass judgment on them than the ordinary

Drinking Water with Meals

And now comes Prof. P. B. Hawk, physiological chemist of the University of Illinois, to shatter that long tradition that it is harmful to drink water with your meals.

The medical profession almost unanimously advise strongly against the drinking of large amounts of water at meal times. The desirable features following the liberal use of water taken at the proper time are thoroughly appreciated, but any suggestion as to the taking of water in large quantity with meals is strongly antagonized.

The principal objection to the copious ingestion of the fluid is based on the supposition that the excess water dilutes the marked degree of the normal rhythm of the digestive functions.

Dr. Hawk does not consider any of the effects of the non-drinking of water, but simply gives the result of experiments on water drinking at meal time and between meals. The subject of the experiment was a man 22 years of age. He was placed on normal and constant diet" for food before the experiment began. Water was given sparingly at first, only half a glass being allowed at each meal, breakfast 7.30, lunch, noon; and dinner 8.15. The supply was increased, with beneficial effect until the subject was drinking three pints of water at each meal and his usual pint between breakfast and lunch, between lunch and dinner, and between dinner and bedtime. This made six quarts of water a day.

Every day the subject was weighed before breakfast, and he gained steadily in weight and healthy tissue. All his physical processes improved. He looked better and felt better as the days wore on, and it was found that the bodily activities were stimulated so that separation and distribution of foods were improved and the effect was kept free of toxic poisons. The effect was an increased storage capacity for nitrogen in the body and "the protein constituents of the diet were more economically utilized during the period of extra water ingestion."

The Year Without a Summer

The year 1816 was called the year without a summer, says the Magazine of American History.

As the springtime approached nothing in the weather indicated the return to seed time, much less of harvest. Snows heavy rains and cold winds prevailed incessantly, and during entire season the sun arose each morning as though in a cloud of smoke, red and rayless, shedding a little light or warmth and setting at night as behind a thick cloud of vapor, leaving hardly a trace of the sun's face on the face of the earth. The frost never went off the ground until about the first of May. The farmers planted their crops but the seed would hardly sprout, and when at last it came to the surface there was not warmth enough to cause any thing to grow. During the month of June young birds were frozen to death in their nests and so great was their destruction that for at least three years after very few birds visited the colder parts of the Northern States. The woods and forests seemed deserted by them. Small fruit such as the juneberry ripened and rotted on the trees in the forests because of no birds to eat them.

Crops that required warmth, like corn, generally failed to mature and only here and there in a few places the ear ripened, especially protected did the ear ripen. The people after repeated hopes of a change in the weather settled down in almost despair. Large spots appeared on the face of the sun, as seen through the smoky atmosphere, distinctly visible with the naked eye; frosts prevailed every day in the whole year, and almost daily in the few places where corn ripened was the only supply of seed for the next year and it was held at an exceedingly high figure with now and then an exception.

Forestry Convention.

Arrangements are now rapidly approaching completion for the Annual Convention of the Canadian Forestry Association which will be held in the Railway Committee Room, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, on February 7 and 8, 1912. The gathering is under the patronage of His Royal Highness, the Governor General, and a number of distinguished men both from Canada and the United States have promised to attend and take part.

The Canadian Lumbermen's Association holds its Annual Meeting on Feb. 6. Special rates have been granted by the railways and as the subjects to be discussed are of the most practical and pressing character, it is expected that there will be a very large attendance of all persons interested in our forest resources.

The office of the Secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association is in the Canadian Building, Ottawa, and from him further information may be obtained.

Punishment by Probation.

A boy of twenty-one connected with a Los Angeles theatre stole $5000 and was caught. Tried and convicted, he received the following sentence: "You shall stay at home nights. You shall remain within the limits of this country. You shall not play billiards or pool, frequent cafes or drink intoxicating liquor and you shall go to work and keep at it until you have paid back every dollar you stole. Violate these terms and you go to prison." This is making very broad use of the reformative theory and the application of the probation system. It will be interesting to see whether it results in the reclamation of the youth and benefit to society in general. On its surface it seems wise, generous, practical. Sentences to prison the boy would be ruined. There would be no chance for the losers to recover their money. The State would pay for the support of a non-producer and turn him loose at the end of his term, incompetent and dispirited. As it is the young man has every chance to return to the ways of honor and respectability. But would the general adoption of such mild discipline provide sufficient protection for society? Some of the more advanced members of the Prison Congress think so, but it is doubtful. It would markedly lessen the risk in being dishonest. And what an instrument of corruption it could
