Marrying The Unfit

It is a late day to talk of government regulation of marriage, so far as physical fitness is concerned. Why should a man not be permitted to marry a woman who is not as strong as she might be? Surely he has the right to care for a weak person if he so desires. It would be a faint-hearted youth that asked government permission to court a girl. The preacher of the doctrine of eugenics should get busy along some other line. The fellows who want wives will continue to ask parents for their daughters and when the request is refused by a grumpy father or an ambitious mother an elopement or a kidnapping is likely to follow. It was always and always will be.

Good Roads

One does not have to look far to learn why the government neglected the cry of the automobilists for good roads and needed that of the farmers. The persistent use of the automobile necessitated the extension of good roads everywhere; but the insistent demand for good roads now comes from the farmers and other residents of rural districts. Congress is more tolerant of expenditures by the Department of Agriculture, it is said, than those of any other Federal Department. The Department of Agriculture is not interested in sports nor in the immediate comfort of cross country tourists but it is spending money now for good roads experimentation in the interests of the farmer. A government exhibit is to be shown this year at every exhibition from one end of the county to the other, where such an exhibit is in order. This exhibit shows materials and methods and even a stone-crushing and road roller in operation by electricity.

Old Superstitions

What is your superstition—perhaps you may regard it as ominous of misfortune to spill the salt. A man has conversed some such notion when a clumsy waiter spilt a plate of hot soup into his lap. Which stocking do you put on first? May be you have not noticed. A friend assures us that nine out of ten persons obey some superstition and usually adhere to their preference like a religion. We have known prosy matter-of-fact people who would not do a particular work on a certain day if anything had caused them to pause after making a start. Superstitions as to luck on particular days of the week are very common. Weaknesses of this kind are found where they would be least expected. M. Monis, the last Prime Minister of France, is said to have an objection to begin walking with the left foot. He has actually put off important engagements because he made a left-foot start. He has a horror of opening a door with his left hand, and he has lately told some friends that on the day when he was so badly hurt at Issy, when his colleague, M. Berthelot, was killed by the airship, he opened the door of his carriage with his left hand! So strong is his superstition of black cats that the three-year-old pet of the Home Office, "Crisis," has been banished. The feline was convicted of having appeared in M. Monis' private office the day the champagne bottle broke out. Worse still, on the fatal Sunday of the airship accident, it was discovered "hastily" in M. Monis' easy chair. These superstitions become almost an obsession to people whose bent of mind lead to their cultivation. But it is rather strange to find shrewd, hard-headed business men yielding to such unreasonable whims, and entirely ignoring the relationship of cause and effect. But superstition is not agreeable to rules of reason.

The Girl on the Farm

We wonder when our farmers will open their eyes to the injustice which they have so often shown to their daughters. Again and again we read paragraphs deploring the fact that so many girls are forsaking the farm for work in the city. Whisk you farmers to tell the reason? In the majority of cases, we believe that it lies, not in youthful unrest, not in longing for city amusements, but in a protest against the paternal policy which denies proper allowance to the daughters of the household. It is all very well to say that our great grandmothers did a great deal more work than their descendants of to-day and that the farmer's daughter of several generations ago was thankful for a roof over her head and the simplest of gowns. Our great grandfathers, also, worked much harder than the modern farmer, who would not dream of using the antiquated implements of sixty years ago. The son on the farm is usually treated with much more consideration than the daughter, in the matter of money. The old distrust of women's business capacity dies hard. The way to remove feminine ignorance is not to refuse to give woman an opportunity to learn the ways of the business world. If a father would take his daughter into his confidence in business matters and encourage her to have her own bank account, with a view to investment, there would be fewer mistakes made by mature women in management of their affairs. A certain widow who has been most successful in looking after her own business, remarked to her lawyer recently, "I owe a great deal to my father, who talked to me in my girlhood about his farm and his investments, giving me advice which I have never forgotten. He believed that every woman should know something of business affairs and be encouraged to have her own account. It has often been said that we cannot learn by the advice of others, that it is necessary to make mistakes of one's own before wisdom is practically attained. This is only partly true. We may not hope to escape blunders and their consequence, but many disasters have been averted by the remembrance of wise counsel. If the farmer wishes to keep his daughter at home—and it is an infinitely better place for her than a city office—let him treat her as an industrial equal, show that he values her work and give her the benefit of his own hard-won experience.

Wedding

A pretty wedding took place June 20 at high noon, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Buckart, Delhi, when their eldest daughter, Maude Alice was united in marriage to W. D. Book of Lindsay, son of Dr. Book of New Dundee. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. W. Conrad to the wedding strains of music played by the bride's sister, Miss Anna Belle. The bride entered the parlor prettily attired in a gown of cream satin charmesse with overdress of marquisette and trimmed with seed pearls. She carried a shower of bridal roses and wore a plain band bracelet the gift of the groom. After the ceremony a wedding dejeuner was served. The bride was the recipient of many handsome presents. Mr. and Mrs. Book left on the afternoon train amid the good wishes of their many friends and upon their return will reside in Lindsay. The bride's going away suit was of tan whipcord smartly tailored, white mican hat with large white willow plume. Guests were present from Toronto, New Dundee, Courland, Jarvis and Delhi.

Around About us

On Wednesday, June 26th, Surgt. Major Hunter E. Burgess of Deeping, Man., formerly of Cayuga and Caledonia, took for his bride Miss S. Hortense McFadden only daughter of Mrs. Mary McFadden of Cayuga.

W. D. Smith of Tillsonburg met with a painful accident Monday. He was engaged in draining the kiln at the oatmeal mill when the head burst, the escaping steam and water scalding him severely about the legs.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

A quiet wedding took place at the Methodist parsonage, Cayuga, Wednesday, June 26th, when Miss Louisa, eldest daughter of Peter Sitter of North Cayuga, became the bride of Lorne Mino, eldest son of John Mino, also of North Cayuga. The ceremony at which Rev. W. H. Garham officiated, was at five o'clock.

Saturday when Mrs. William Roberts and daughter, of Woodhouse, were driving to Simcoe the horse took fright at a passing automobile, and by turning sharply in the road, the occupants of the buggy were thrown out. Mrs. Roberts had a bone broken in her ankle, the daughter escaped with a few slight bruises.

Saturday the five year old daughter of George Fisher, Simcoe, was riding on the sidewalk on Kent street in a child's automobile, by some means the auto left the sidewalk, with the child in it, and ran underneath a span of horses belonging to Geo. Birt. The horses were frightened and ran down the street, the wagon passing over the child's legs. No bones were broken, but she was badly bruised and received some slight cuts.

The House Fly

It is by no means difficult to study fly life. Indeed it has been so carefully studied by scientist that you do not have to go far to find all you may care to know about the fly. And it is among the most interesting of the many insects that buzz around us. It is a scavenger, first, last and all the time, and it is forever on the job. It works in the daylight, and in the open, so that you can see just what it is doing. And when you find it in your house you may gamble on it that there is something there which needs to be removed, and it is doing all within its power to get rid of it. It feeds upon the ferments peculiar to fresh meats, and that which it renders instead of these dangerous particles rendering the meat all the more wholesome. It destroys the septic germs taken from the air so that meat is less liable to decomposition. If you want to get rid of flies clean out the things it feeds upon, destroy its breeding places, and cease worrying about it. Find out why the fly is, study its habits and adjust yourself to the newly discovered conditions.

To the Telephone Girl

The telephone girl sits still in her chair and listens to voices from everywhere. She hears all the news, she knows who is happy and who has the blues; she knows all our sorrows, she knows all our joys; she knows of our troubles, she knows of our strife; she knows every man who talks mean to his wife; she knows every time we are out with the boys; she hears the excuses each fellow employs; she knows every woman who boasts of a past; she knows every man who's inclined to be "fast"; in fact, there's a secret "neath each saucy curl of that quiet, demure-looking telephone girl. If she would turn half told all that she knows it would turn half our friends into bitterest foes; she could sow a small wind that would soon be a gale, engulf us in trouble and land us in jail; she could let go a story which gaining in force, would cause half us wives to sue for divorce; she could get all our churches mixed up in a fight, and turn all our days into sorrowing nights; in fact, she could tell the whole town in a steve if she'd keep a tenth part of the things that she knew. Oh, really, now doesn't it make your head whirl when you think what you owe to the telephone girl?

The Summer Cat

Sometimes it happens that people who would keenly resent any charge against them of cruelty to animals are unconsciously guilty of a cruelty that in its working out is worse than any deliberately causing suffering. Several hundred families have gone away for the summer, as is their custom at this time of the year. In a number of cases it is not convenient to take the family cat with them, and the animal is turned out into the byways to forage for itself. Now, in days of daily scavenging and educated civic cleanliness little food refuse is to be found by the homeless street animal. Moreover, the tragedy to an animal, carefully fed for half its lifetime and suddenly turned out to live or starve, is akin to the tragedy among men, when a wealthy man, untrained to all work, loses all his money and all helping friends. Moreover, the homeless cats, once winter arrives, are usually killed by equally homeless but suffer this end or are starved or frozen to death. This is needless suffering and in cases when the suburbanite cannot see his way clear to take to the country with him the family cat, a five cent piece will procure at any drug store, some agent of euthanasia which will write a sure finish on all feline worries. A quick end, such as this is surely, to an animal, the kindest mercy as beside being turned out to starve and freeze.
