OIL ON EGG SHELLS.

Some time ago a "chicken crank" was laughed at because he asserted that the egg received a secration from the hen's body in process of incubation which assisted the chick to grow and hatch, and that he had secured some of this secretion by means of which he was getting equally as good results in the incubator as under hens. Eight years later the Oregon Experiment Station says in Bulletin No. 100: "It is quite evident that the eggs on which a hen has been sitting have a small, oily deposit on their surface, and since eggs from incubator at same stage of incubation show only a small fraction of this amount of oil it is plain that the oily matter is not deposited on the exterior surface of the shell through evaporation in process of incubation, but is a natural secretion from the hen. What the function of this secretion is, or whether it has any particular function other than to possibly check evaporation, is not yet determined, but some tests are now under way in his connection which will be reported later."

At this station Prof. Bradley experimented as follows to discover the amount of oil on the eggs: All loose material was brushed off the egg shell, which was then held in tongs and the shell washed with a jet of ether, the washings being caught in a weighed watch glass. The ether was allowed to evaporate, the residue dried and weighed. From 12 fresh eggs, three milligrams of oil were secured; the same amount was secured from 12 china eggs two weeks under the hen, while from 12 hen eggs two weeks under the hen 28 milligrams of oil were secured, and but 4.6 milligrams from 12 hen eggs two weeks in incubator. Whether or not this oil has a function to perform in the process of incubation is an interesting question. It is to be hoped the chicken crank who bottles this secretion has the satisfaction of reading this bulletin, which in a way confirms his assertion.—Wallace's Farmer.

It may be that the above will interest some of the cranks down this way. We are all quite sure there is yet to be discovered the reason why fully developed chickens die just before the hatch. We are all experimenting and thinking, trying to discover the cause, but so far none of us has made much progress in our investigations. If the above mentioned crank is on the right trail and trees the game, we will be happy.

DOES A HEN "SET" OR "SIT"?

An old subject of discussion has been revived and there are signs, in the acrimony of certain editors of Florida, of a serious rebellion against the lexicographers. The question refers to to the proper verb to use in describing the act of a hen when she obeys her maternal instinct. It is as important as the religious schism that rent the empire of Lilliput when the Bigendians persisted in making it a matter of conscience to break their eggs at the larger end in defiance of the solemn proclamation of the law that all citizens of that land of little men should break them at the other end under penalty of severe punishment.

The dictionary is the court of last resort in all disputes as to words. Of course dictionaries do not always agree. But we find no lack of concord in this matter. Taking Webster's Unabridged as the first authority to be quoted, we find the following defination—so far as applies in this case:

Sit. 7. To cover and warm eggs for hatching, as a fowl; to brood; to incubate.

This is enforced by a quotation from Jeremiah xvii: 11, showing that such was the use of the word when the King James version of the Bible was brought forth. A similar defination of the word "sit" is given in the Century Dictionary. Under the word "set" there is no definition that applies to the manner in which the hen brings forth her young, in either dictionary, but the following note appears in Webster's at the end of nearly a page of definitions of the verb "to set":

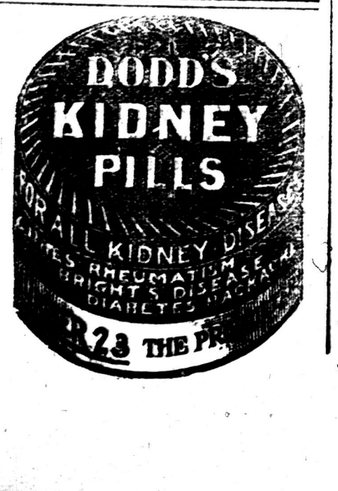
"The use of the very 'set' for 'sit' in such expressions as, the hen it setting on thirteen eggs, a setting hen, etc., although colloquially common, sometimes tolerated in serious writing, is not to be approved."

Thus we see that Jupiter frowns on the word so often used colloquially in reference to the second stage in the female fowl's reproduction of her kind. It follows as a matter of course that the word "setting" as applied to a clutch of eggs is not to be found in any dictionary. Say "a sitting of eggs" and you will be respecting the purity of the English language. Say "setting" and you will merely "colloquially common," which Heaven forfend, but touching on and appertaining to this momentous question, the real interest may be condensed in the following:

"Mother, which is the correct way to express yourself in speaking of a hen: to say she is sitting or setting?"

"My son, that does not interest me at all. What I want to know when I hear a hen cackle is whether she is laying or lying."

The man who assumes the I-am-holier-than thou attitude seems to forget that the Swiss cheese can do the same thing.



THE CENTRE OF THE EARTH.

How the Zuni Indians Have Marked the Spot by a Crude Shrine.

Why all this fuss and controversy as to whether it was Cook or Peary, or either of them, or both, that discovered the north pole? Surely the centre of the earth is as important as either extremity; and the Zuni Indians have the centre safely corralled and appropriately marked upon their reservation. They feel quite sure of it, and that ought to be sufficient.

In the Zuni cosmogony, the earth is conceived of as flat, and shaped like a pancake. Being a chosen people of the gods, they were commanded early in their tribal career to go to the exact centre of the world, and there build their homes, and one of the most interesting legends of the people relates the story of their wanderings in search of the middle place, and tells how they knew it when they reached it. It is about 200 yards south of their village in western New Mexico, thirty-five miles south of Gallup, on the Santa Fe route. It is marked by a crude shrine, built like a bake oven, out of flat stones. Two large removable flagstones close the entrance, which faces the rising sun.

On the top are a number of concretionary formations, known to the Indians as thunder stones. In the interior are large numbers of feather tufted prayer sticks, and several earthenware vessels filled with sacred meal. Numerous ceremonial dances, in the nature of rainmaking rites, are performed around this holy place.—From the Kansas City Star.

Bear Plentiful In Georgia Swamp.

"There are still great numbers of bears about my place in the swamp," said Monroe Phillips yesterday, whose plantation is down the river, only a few miles below Macon.

For years Mr. Phillips has been trying to get rid of the bears tha tinfest his place. He has organized bands of hunters and at one time made an offer to the Secretary of War to send a troop there for the purpose, but all to no purpose. It is estimated that there are more than 200 bears in the locality and they are constantly carrying off pigs and raiding the cornfields. Many of them have been caught in traps, but they now pay no attention to traps, getting al lthey can eat without risking their lives for the sake of bait.—From the Macon Telegraph.

THE STARCHED COLLAR.

(Rochester Post Express.)

A writer in the "British Medical Journal" declares that the starched collar and neckband which fashion prescribes to men are a menace to health. He has cured himself and a number of others, he says, of sundry ailments, ranging from gout, rheumatism and consumption to mental weakness simply by getting them to loosen their neckwear. He declares that few men have "the full means of communication between brain and body that nature would have supplied." This plea for the restoration of man to his primal health along with his primal decolette has hot weather comfort as an argument in its favor. It also explains, perhaps, the growing mental supremacy of women.

TURBINE'S LONG JOURNEY.

Some time ago at a gas manufactory at Ivry, near Paris, a turbine, propelled by jets of steam, was set running and driven 3,000 hours, or 150 days, without a stop. Lubrication was supplied by an automatic oiler. As the speed of the circumference of the rotating disc was about six miles a minute, a point on that circumference travelled during the 150 days almost five and a half times the distance from the earth to the moon.

LADY DUFF GORDON.

(London Daily News)

"Lady Duff Gordon stands in front of a great model of the Titanic. She is a fair creation, daintily chiseled, graceful in movement, arresting in speech. Her voice is tuned to the siren's note, her little face is pale and plaintive and her whole being is braced to the edge of victory over her accusers. The white aigrette of Friday last, erect and challenging, has given place to the sweep of a large black picture hat, shading her eyes to the left and drooping with a hint of tears over the right shoulder. A collar of exquisite lace ripples down from the shapely neck to the waist, very white and vivid against the black dress."

WELL TRANSPLANTED SEED.

They have been discovering some extraordinary plants in England, plants which puzzled the botanists to whom they were either utterly unknown or known as growing only in far lands. One naturalist picked on the grounds of the Bradford sewage works 100 species of foreign plants. Among these were several Australian burrs, jimson weed, prickle poppies from Mexico, others native to Peru, Siberia, and the Azores.

All were of a prickly nature. Investigation proved that the dust from wool combing establishments was being used as fertilizer and the washings were run into the sewers. The burrs of these foreign plants had come in the wool and had grown.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

JEALOUS FISHES IN A DUEL.

"Fish are liable to the same passions as you and I; and they fight and love as we do," said Dr. Francis Ward. "I can show you a photograph of a rainbow trout in what would have been a fight to the death if I had not interfered. In a pond were a big female trout and her partner, who resented the intrusion of another trout.

"Suddenly one fish charged the other and seized him by the jaw. He shook his opponent as a dog shakes a rat, and kept on until his enemy floated on the top. Then I took the fish out and revived it with a little weak whiskey and water."—From the London Daily Mail.

"JAY WALKING."

(From the Survey)

Kansas City has decided that as a city grows it is very evident that all traffic on foot as well as on wheels must be controlled. It believes that the "jay walker" is a menace to traffic in a busy city, and will not permit him to stray all over a street on which the movement of vehicles is strictly regulated and so increase the danger of accidents, nor will it allow him to cut corners.

The Kansas City Star says of the new ordinance: "It is not so bad for Kansas City to be setting the pace in such matters. Incidentally the police force, which is enforcing the ordinance with vigor and discretion, deserves a large share of the credit for ushering in the new regime of orderly traffic."

THE CONVERT.

He said he hated motor cars
And wished they all could be
Marooned upon a lonely isle,
Or sunk beneath the sea.
He vowed a chauffeur ought to hang
In chains from every limb,
And reckoned that this faithful mare
Was good enough for him.

But lo! one morning he awoke
And found himself the heir
To all his uncle's hoarded wealth,
And straightway sold the mare.
He bought a little runabout,
A sporty red machine,
And clad in cap and goggles joined
The guild of gasoline.

He rides all day and half the night,
He loves to toot the horn,
And pass the horses on the road
With looks of lofty scorn.
"I tell you," he delights to say,
"To travel fast and far
For business and for pleasure, too,
There's nothing like the car."

PENNY WISE, POUND FOOLISH.

How to save a nickel and lose a thousand dollars is a lesson learned by a Bronx contractor. He was at the Fordham station of the Third avenue elevated and he wanted to go to West Farms, at the end of the Lenox subway, to submit a bid on a contract. The ordinary way to make such a trip would be to pay two car fares, but this careful contractor saw a way to complete the journey for a single fare, but he says he will never do it again.

He bought an elevated ticket and rode down town to Third avenue and 149th street, where he got a transfer to the downtown subway train. He intended to ride down to the next station, Mott avenue, get off there and cross to the uptown side and ride back to his destination, thus saving five cents. Unfortunately that day there was an accident on the subway, and trains were blocked for nearly an hour, and he was in a train that was stalled half way between two stations. When he finally did arrive at the office he found all the bids had been opened and the contract awarded. His bid, however, was lower than the one accepted, yet it was for a sum sufficiently large to have shown him a cool profit of $1,000.

Then he went out and spent about $20 in drinks to drown his sorrow.

FARM AND GARDEN

EDUCATING THE COLT.

Faulty training is responsible for most of the bad-tempered, unreliable and unmanageable horses.

The colt's education should commence soon after birth, and the amount of handling which he received should be increased as time goes on. There is a difference between petting or pampering and teaching the colt. Kindness and patience must be the keynote of the training, but pampering will prove a nuisance, being responsible for many vicious animals. The colt must be dealt with firmly, and made to understand what is expected of him. Teach him to mind what is said to him. Handle his limbs to promote quietness. Get him accustomed to the halter and to being led while yet with his dam. Be gentle with him, yet never leave him unless you have accomplished what you set out to do. If he beats you once, he will remember it. After weaning, continue the traiing. Lead him around as much as possible, and while doing so teach him to stop when ya say "whoa!" and to start when he is told. This is also a good time to begin teaching him to back, as backing is a part of a horse's work that very few of them do with a willingness or ease. The education must be continuous, not spasmodic. One lesson a week or a month is useless, because in the interim he has largely forgotten his previous work. There is no better stable for a colt than a box stall, but if allowed to run in one of these he should be tied in a narrow stall for a few hours each day, because it is important that he become thoroughly familiar with being tied. A colt that is not halter-broken and tied when young, often gives trouble when he is needed for work in life, and he has to be put through his education thoroughly, the halter, the bridle and the entire harness being introduced to him in one day.

Such colts are very often stubborn and hard to break, and can it be wondered at? Having been allowed freedom so long, they rightfully object to such usage. Many halter-pullers and badpered horses result from such treatment. Do not attempt too much at once, but take the animal to do carefully and well everything you attempt with him. As the use of the bit taught him. This will time goes on, he should be bitted and take time, and it is always better if the animal is thoroughly used to the bridle before the harness is placed upon him. A colt never forgets his first harnessing. If he succeeds in getting away, or in committing any other bad tricks, he can be depended on to try them again. After he has been harnessed several times he may be hitched. It is generally better to hitch him beside a good-natured and good mannered, thoroughly reliable old horse. If such an animal is not available, it is better to hitch him single, as an irritable animal will often bite or kick the awkward colt, and thus cause much trouble. The colt should be driven until he is tired the first time he is hitched. It is not advisable to exhaust his energy, but it is important that he become tired, especially if he is a spirit animal. Driving should be continued each day until he has become thoroughly reliable and handy. The modern colt is easily educated is properly handled. Many generations of domestication have caused him to acquire education readily, and yet there is in the country a large number of bad-mannered, badly broken and poorly-educated horses.

PLAYGROUNDS AND GARDENS.

(Pittsburg Gazette-Times.)

The Pittsburgh Playgrounds Association announces that it has already opened 28 centers, of which 16 are gardens, although May is but barely two-thirds gone. The association rightfully maintains that there are many pleasant days before the school term closes which should be enjoyed by the little folk. The good these playgrounds and gardens are doing in promoting health and knowledge of the soil and its products is incalculable. The wonder is that the importance of such diversion as an auxiliary to school studies did not impress itself on the authorities of our cities long ago.

To see thees youngsters at play, or eagerly working over a vegetable bed in the gardens, is satisfying proof of the wisdom of the outdoor movement. Of course there is an adult in charge of ecah plot, and with him the children work over eevry foot of the ground during the season certain huors ebing designed for this purpose. They learn not only the mysteries of the soil at first hand, but are taught the economic value of the small garden, a feature which is important enough in these days of high food prices. If a child can be shown that a comparatively few square feet of earth, intelligently cultivated, will supply the average family with fresh vegetables during most of the summer he (or she) will have amply compensated the prime movers in this philanthropy.

THE FIRST SUFFRAGE MARTYR.

The cause of woman's suffrage has never lacked leaders. Indeed the proportion of leaders to soldiers of the rank and file is believed to be unnecessarily large. But now it has its first martyr in the person of Miss Aimee Hutchinson, who has been deprived of employment because she marched in the great parade.

History glistens with the names of those who have laid down their lives in behalf of their principles. It is safe to say that no great cause has ever triumphed without the loss of some of its adherents. In the general warfare of women for the right to vote a job is the equivalent of a life in the days of Arnold Winkelried, and its loss entitles the loser to the martyr's crown.

Nathen Hale died regretting that he had but one life to give to his country, but Miss Hutchinson can look forward to many jobs, any one of which we are sure she will be willing to sacrifice to the cause she holds so dear.

NEVER PAYS.

(Philadelphia Record.)

Two youths arraigned before a New York Judge were told to stand one side and an habitual criminal was invited to tell them what experience had taught him. "I should advise them," he said, "to let thieving alone and lead honest lives. I've been at it thirty years, and there's nothing in it. Look at me! I've let many opportunities to live right go by, and have brought only misery and unhappiness upon myself. I've never known anybody that made a real success of stealing what belonged to other people." The way of the transgressor is hard, and that is the most valuable information that can be given to young feilows tempted to begin courses of crimes.

SOCIAL CENTRES.

(Chicago Tribune.)

In Chicago the school centre movement is well begun. Sixteen buildings were utilized last winter with encouraging results, and there is little question that the idea will be industrially developed in a community so thoroughly alive to measures of social and civic betterment as ours is coming to be. Chicago made a spler did beginning with the small parks and leads the cities in this work. She ought to push the school centre project, which is closely allied to it, with equal vigor.
