A Mother's Strategy

(From the Chicago News.)

"Yes," said the woman with a family, in reply to her caller's remark, "I am beginning to look forward to my summer. I have already engaged the cottage at the lake and started hunting by mail for a laundress, so it seems quite like old times. Only, I do hope I shall have a quieter summer than the last. I was quite worn out when I returned to town."

"You see, you can never count on what my boys will do. I am not speaking of the canoe trips, where they decide to spend all night, without notifying me, and I got everybody out searching for their bodies because they do not come home in the evening; neither do I refer to their habit of bringing six boys home to dinner when I haven't provisions enough for ourselves. It is their affairs of the heart that increase my gray hairs. I used to say that if I could help them grow up to years of discretion without eloping with Bertha, the beautiful sewing girl or a siren fifteen years their senior I should consider my life well spent. But I had no idea they began so early.

"It was Tom who saw her first at the inn, and he came home gasping at the vision. He told Dick and Edgar, so, after they had rushed away on her trail I strolled down to the hotel to have a look myself.

"I recognized her right away. She was out gunning. I knew precisely what her mother had said to her as they packed their trunks and started. It was: 'This is your last chance, Madeline, and if you don't get somebody this time, goodness only knows what will become of us! Remember, you are 25.'

"She had melting blue eyes, too; so you can imagine what chance Tom and the others had. They are good-looking boys, if they are mine, and Tom is a six-footer at 23, and has a habit of looking like a young millionaire. I began inviting Madeleine to the house. I began her my little companion at breakfast, lunch and dinner. Madeleine was the first thing Tom saw when he stepped out of the front door in the morning, and I kept the vision before his eyes the rest of the day by dint of working hard.

"At first he was blissfully happy, and it was pretty hard to let Madeleine sit in the hammock with him while I remained inside the house. But just before Tom was due to beg her to elope, the natural perversity of man, who doesn't want what is thrust upon him, came to the rescue. 'This is a frightful bore!' he roared at me one day when I said Madeleine was coming to lunch. 'Can't a fellow have a minute of peace?'

"I knew Tom was safe then, and was free to turn my attention to Edgar. Edgar had been prowling around in the background, consumed with jealousy. He was 21, and he felt that he had struck the one love of his life, only to find that she was another's. When he found that Madeleine was not another's, after all, he jumped in. At least he thought he did, not being able to perceive that he had crossed her line of vision just as she was looking around for someone to fill the vacant spot caused by the defection of Tom, who had ignominiously accepted a two-week invitation up north.

"Edgar's case was more difficult to handle than Tom's had been. He was not a hammock man, preferring to take Madeline for long strolls and moonlight rows, so I was very much handicapped. I'd have midnight suppers for them, but Madeleine was wary of my invitations now. That girl infuriated me, for she didn't play the game fair. She didn't miss a trick—she sprained her ankle two miles from home, and Edgar had partially to carry her all that way. She tipped over the boat in shallow water and let him rescue her, having curly hair and the inhuman ability to look like a mermaid when soaked.

"Edgar used to sit and gaze at her with the expression of a languishing young calf, and I wanted to spank him. Finally, he came home one evening, and coughed loudly, woke me up to announce that Madeleine had consented to link her life with his unworthy one, and, oh, wasn't he fortunate? I said yes, he was very fortunate, but I didn't tell him why. It was because he had a mother ready to rescue him.

"The next day I took Madeleine in my arms and kissed her, and said I was so glad she cared enough for Edgar to wait five years for him to finish college and his medical course, and that she was a brave girl to be willing to face the ten years or more before he would be able to make a decent living at his profession. I said that Edgar's father and I felt very strongly on the subject of letting the boys fight their own way with no assistance from us. Madeleine turned a trifle pale at that.

"It took her just two days to decide that while she loved Edgar madly, they were not suited to each other, and much as it wrenched her heart, she was resolved not to spoil his career.

"Leaving Edgar holding his aching head, and wondering what had hit him, I looked around to see what was happening to Dick. Dick is eighteen, and he had discovered a little girl at the farm where we bought our butter. Mamie wore pink ginghams and you expected her to stroll down to the footlights, blink her eyes twice and burst into song about a daisy in the dell. Only she got mixed on verbs—and, well, she was the sort that eats pie with a knife. Dick raved about her being so simple and natural, but what he meant was that she had a milk and roses complexion, which would be red and blotchy in five years if she kept on eating fried pork twice a day, as they all do around there.

"The case of Mamie quite puzzled me till I asked her over one day with five or six summer girls whose mothers were friends of mine, and with whom Dick had grown up. It was a sewing bee and tea party, and I took care that Dick was at home. Afterward he announced that he wished summer was over, for it was a bore. So I brought them all home safe and sound, but goodness knows, I dread this coming summer!"

"I don't wonder!" said the caller.

TRUTH.

Lord Bacon said that Pilate asked "what is truth?" and did not wait for an answer. What is truth? I stand in the road, that is the truth of position. I build a house, that is a truth of construction. I drive an engine, that is a truth of locomotion. I build a bridge, that is a truth of continuity. You travel as if there was no river. I stand before a learned man, he shows me his models, diagrams, and plans; he is important, sufficient, demonstrations. I see only a part of the man, there are signs of talent, but the heart is not in evidence. To be cold and clear and clever, may be the truth in power, but I want more than power to make life complete.

Only One has said, "I am the truth," embodied, illustrated, adorned. Watch Jesus Christ carefully and you will see not a part but a whole (holy) man. Whether at a wedding, by the side of the well asking for a drink, at the last supper eating the passover lamb, at the bar of Pilate, He is ever the full man. "I am the way, the truth and the life," by Me men enter into the presence of the Father, by Me sins are gathered into a lump and cast into the depths of the sea; by Me is the death warrant of the soul cancelled; by Me is the right of entry into grace, and fellowship, and heaven.

Look at His prayer: "Sanctify them through thy truth." Set apart, defended, adorned, equipped. They are chosen They are chosen and called and faithful. Truth in the Bible, and out of it, the truth of love, sympathy and spiritual power, of likeness to Me, of their oneness in Me and in thee!

"I go away and the comforter will come and lead you into all truth." What is the comforter but another name for Himself. Has Christ gone on a long journey, has He been away ever since His death? Think, and think deep. How long was He away, and then only in semblance? Only three days. How can the Infinite be away? Look at it as a Jew, and you are right. He is away, and all the Jewish regime, crown, sceptre, temple, all in ruins! Look at it as a spiritual man, a man in Christ Jesus, and you will see the absurdity of the poverty stricken attenuation in not a few. "Lo! I am with you alway," even to the end of the world, the age, the whole of time. When He said the comforter shall come he meant Himself. To this end was I born for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness to the Truth. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." The voice of truth still sends out its formula: "Bring no more vain oblation, increase is an abomination unto me, your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth. Wash you, make you clean, cease to do evil, learn to do well."

"When our zeal is burning low,
When right is hard, and easy wrong;
When we despair of progress slow,
And the old sins are pulling strong,
When for fresh strength we turn to Thee,
The carpenter of Galilee.

Measurements and Weights of Baby.

Many a mother is interested to know the size of the average infant, and to compare her own with what is considered as a standard. The following measurements are given by Dr. Holt, and it may be accepted as average:

At birth. Height—20½ inches; chest, 13½ inches; head, 14 inches.

One year. Height—29 inches; chest, 18 inches; head, 18 inches.

Three years. Height—35 inches; chest, 20 inches; head, 19¼ inches.

The matter of the weight is one which should be watched more carefully; the gain in flesh is a good indication as to whether or not the child is thriving, and often determines the amount and character of its nourishment. During the fifth month a baby's weight is supposed to be doubled; at the end of a year it should be tripled. For the first six months there should be a weekly weighing; at the end of the first week there will probably be a slight loss, which should be regained during the second week. After this there should be a weekly gain of from four to six ounces until the child is six months of age; this rate will be reduced during the next six months, when the increase in weight will be from two to four ounces each week. After the first year an annual gain of four to five pounds is all that can be expected until the child is nine or ten years of age.

HE WAS CAUTIOUS.

(Vancouver Province.)

An old farmer of Dumfrieshire was the guest of a fine lady in that country. When the afternoon tea was served the hostess observed that the old man gulped down his before they could serve the other guests. Again and again the farmer passed his cup to be refilled. At the ninth cup, the lady, becoming uneasy as to the supply on hand, ventured to ask: "How many cups of tea do you take, John?" "How many do you gie?" asked John, warily.

HE KNEW.

"Papa," queried little Lois, who was looking through a catalogue of agricultural implements, "what is a chilled plow?"

"I know," exclaimed her 6-year-old brother. "It's a plow that has stood outside in the cold all winter."

MAXWELL'S

LAWN MOWER

adds to the pleasure of possessing "a well kept lawn".

You'll notice the difference in the Maxwell Lawn Mower the first time you cut the grass with it.

Crucible Steel Cutter Knives cut clean and close, and hold their edge. Cold rolled steel shafts mean easy running. The whole mower is so compact, so strong and perfectly balanced, that cutting the lawn is a light, pleasant exercise, that you will really enjoy.

Made in 4 styles sizes from 8" to 22" in width — with and without grass-catching attachment.

Your hardware man probably has all sizes in Maxwell's Lawn Mowers—if not he can get it for you. Insist on Maxwell. Write us

RUSSIA'S NEW NAVAL BASE.

Reval, which Russia proposes to make into one of her strongest naval bases, has under a variety of owners been a fortified town for many centuries. The Danes were the first to occupy and strengthen it in the thirteenth century. Then came the Hanseatic League, which made it one of its leading ports, and then in 1561 it became Swedish territory. Bombardments by the Danes and Russians failed to reduce it, and it was still an important fortress when it surrendered to Peter the Great in 1710, and since then it has been greatly strengthened by Russia.

Perched on a hill within a huge circling harbor, Reval still retains memories of its checkered history. A year or two ago I found about half a dozen droshkies on the stand in the quiet market-place. Between them the drivers chaffered in German, Swedish, Russian, French—and one of them could bargain only in the language of Lithuania.—From the London Chronicle.

HIS SAVINGS.

"How much you got in the savings bank?"

I asked Hi Hicks one day—

"Well, now," says Hi, "my pile's so big I can't exactly say."

"I got a wife and three fine lads
That thinks the world of me,
A little cottage that was home,
And one good apple tree.

"A garden grows beside my door
To cheer the summer sun,
And I can sit at evening
And watch the shadows run.

"I have a little road to walk
With flowers on each side.
There's rivers here and forests there,
And stars at eventide.

"I have a lovely wad of spring,
The dandelion's gold,
The heavenly orchestra of birds,
The sun-kissed hills unrolled.

"I have the splendors of the down—
The solitudes of night—
I have a cat, I have a pipe
And I've my appetite."

LAWYER FOR THE APACHES.

One Paris lawyer has had his name struck off the rolls because it was discovered that he acted as the regular legal adviser to the "apache" fraternity, from which he drew $6,600 annually in fees. One day he was engaged to defend an apache in a suburban court.

His client was not satisfied with the lawyer's procedure in the case, and after a heated argument outside the court the client threw the lawyer into the River Marne.—From Case and Comment.

KNEW HER AGAIN.

(Vancouver Province.)

Mary met Emily on the street. They had not seen each other for many years. "Why, how do you do?" exclaimed Mary, effusively, topping off the salutation with a few vague pecks at Emily's face. "Now, this is delightful," said Emily, who was older than Mary. "You haven't seen me for eleven years, and yet you knew me at once. I couldn't have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me." Said Mary, "I recognized your bonnet."

NEGRO FARMERS.

(Victoria Colonist.)

The negro population of the United States is rapidly taking to agriculture. The negroes occupy millions of acres either as owners or tenants, and the area in their hands is increasing with remarkable rapidity. That the white man should be forced out of the ownership of a large and valuable part of the nation by the descendants of former slaves is one of the ironies of history.

FORESTS, WATER

Benefits of Manitoba Forest Reserves to Country.

The water supply of a district is always considerably influenced by the forests at or near the head-waters of its streams. This is one of the reasons why large districts have been set aside by the government of the Dominion of Canada and many other governments, to be kept permanently as forests.

The soil within the forest, largely composed as it is of decaying and decayed leaves, twigs and other vegetable matter, acts much like a sponge in soaking up the moisture that falls. On the other hand, the absence of high winds within the forest does much to prevent or lessen exaporation.

The Riding mountain and Turtle mountain forest reserves in Manitoba are good examples of this fact. In the Riding Mountain reserve are the head-waters of the Minnedosa (Little Saskatchewan or Rapid) River, one of the important tributaries of the Assiniboine from which, by the way, the town of Minnedosa is now deriving power. On the other side of the reserve issue many rivers, among which are the Vermilion, Valley and Ochre Rivers and Edwards Creek. The last named is a source of water supply for the town of Dauphin.

HE UNDERSTOOD THE LANGUAGE

An Indianapolis public school teacher some time ago, she relates, received in her room a small boy from the Kentucky-Tennessee borderland, and she set about teaching him the intricacies of addition. She found he could run up down a column of figures readily, but she could not make him understand how to "carry" from one column to another when the total was more than nine.

Finally the teacher called on one of the little girls in the class and told her she would give her a dime if she could make the newcomer understand the process. Next day the little girl called to claim the money.

"How did you make him see it so quickly?" inquired the teacher.

"Oh, I told him when he got a number of two figures to put down the one on the right and tote the other across, and he knew what I meant right away."—From the Indianapolis News.

LABBY'S PREDICAMENT.

The worst mess that I ever got into was at a dinner in a country town where I took the chair. Having got through all the usual toasts some friend prompted me to propose the health of the Mayor's wife. I drew a picture of a sort of modern Cornellia; I dwelt upon the matron's domestic virtues, and prayed heaven that I might find such a wife. Carried away by my subject, I had forgotten my audience. Suddenly I perceived that some were looking down, others staring at me as though their eyes would come out of their heads, others smiling in a curious manner, while the Mayor himself was glaring at me like a wild beast. I discovered afterward that the Mayoress had fled from the domestic hearth a few weeks previously with a Don Juan of a grocer. I have never been asked since to take the chair at a dinner in that town.—Labby Reprinted" in Truth.

Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

WORLD'S SEVEN WONDERS.

(Buffalo Express.)

Cornell professors have decided on the following in the seven modern wonders of the world: Wireless, synthetic chemistry, radium, antitoxins, aeroplanes, Panama Canal and telephone.

No doubt these are great achievements, but the seven wonders for which the world is anxiously waiting are as follows:

A machine that will button women's waists down the back.

A wind shield that can be worn on the shoulders to keep hats from blowing off.

A speed regulator that will automatically slow down an automobilh when a cop is near.

An electric door-trier to enable policeman to ascertain whether stores on their beats are locked witnout having to go around to see.

A cigar that is made of tobacco throughout without the customary chunk of asbestos in the middle.

A job that will pay a lazy man a living without requiring him to work.

A politician who knows what truth is and dares to tell it.

If a growing plant thrive in a room in which there is a piano there is sufficient moisture in the air to keep the instrument in good condition.

ANIMALS PREDICT QUAKES.

Dogs Deserted a Chilean Town—Crocodiles Leave the Orinoco.

Domestic animals seem to be especially susceptible to the approach of the quake. In 1825 in Chile every dog fled from the city before the inhabitants perceived that faintest hint of the impending catastrophe. In 1867 in Java immediately before the earthquake every rooster crowed shrilly and left the doomed town. In 1868 in the city of Iquique the terrific disaster was announced many hours beforehand by great swarms of screaming gulls and other birds which flew inland. On the Orinoco crocodiles invariably leave the river on the imminence of earthquake.

Five days before the earthquake that destroyed Elike in 373 B. C. is said to have driven to the surface of the earth mice, moles, weasels and serpents that nest underground. Before the Sicilian earthquake of 1783 animals came to the surface, as well as various creatures of the sea, especially fish, in stupendous numbers, among them also such as are found only in the greatest depths of the water. The unrest of the animals also heralded the coming of the recent Sicilly and Calabria seismic disasters.

The basis of this remarkable instinct of animals, reptiles, birds and fish is held by many observers to be responsible for their early perception. Others attribute to these creatures an unknown sixth sense, in its way as enigmatic as the sense of locality in many animals. Others say it is the sense of hearing or their sensibility to agitation that enables animals to notice the effect of the occurrences in the interior of the earth long before mankind with coarser senses can perceive it.

But in this case has arisen the objection that the delicacy of the animal senses exceeds that of the finest seismographic apparatus. The animals can foretell earthquakes with a probability that approaches certainty, and we by no means have satisfactorily explained their superiority to mankind in this regard.—Chicago Tribune.

A THIRTY POUND MUSHROOM.

An interesting thing in the mushroom line came to light recently when a giant specimen weighing over thirty pounds was found near Pittsburg by one of the professors in the Carnegie school. The mushroom was edible, it was found, and though it may not have been the growth of a night, it certainly grew in less than forty-eight hours, since a search of its locality made the day previous to that on which it was found disclosed no evidence of it. If mushroom growers could attange to cultivate this particular species more than one mushroom fortune might be the result.—From the Epicure.

FIRE WASTE.

(The Bulletin.)

Property is burning up at the rate of $30,000 per hour on this continent. Insurance companies only distribute the fire losses, and must collect in premiums the amount necessary. The greater the fire losses the more they must collect. The more the people are assessed to pay for the fire loss, the less they have to spend for other things. Just as whatever is wasted in the home makes the struggle of the family harder, so whatever is wasted in a nation makes it harder for its people to live. These homely truths are emphasized in a circular sent out by the National Fire Protection Association of the United States, which is doing a great work in fighting the fire waste.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S THIRD SON

Prince Adalbert, third son of Kaiser William, is an ofifcer in the German navy. He is twenty-eight years old and is not yet married. To the despair of his father and mother he insists on remaining a bachelor. The truth is that he is crazed with love of a pretty actress, Mlle. Paula Frieden, whom he has installed in a villa at Kiel.

Some time ago there was given at Kiel, at the residence of the Prince, a costume ball. The beautiful Paula was present. All at once William II appeared in the room. He had come express from Berlin and was in costume of the grand elector of Brandenburg. He showed his dissatisfaction by frowning horribly.

This made great loise in the navy, but the rupture the Emperor expected to produce did not come. He then decided to send the obstinate Prince to New York, where the nieces of Uncle Sam await him with secret hope. In this was to be explained this journey to which has been given a diplomatic significance.

It was the Prince's little friend who revealed this secret.—From Le Cri de Paris.

THE NAVAL COMPETITION.

(New York Sun.)

The crews of all the big gun ships were raised to full strength, flotillas of torpedo craft were assembled and constantly exercised, stores were collected, coal accumulated, and the "fighting strength of the navy in home waters was at least doubled"; and the day came when Lord Fisher said that Englishmen could sleep securely in their beds, for the navy was prepared for any emergency. But that was before the order issued in December last, to increase the German personnel to 80,000 men, and commission a third squadron of ten Dreadnoughts and six small cruisers for reconnaissance to reenforce the two battle squadrons of the High Sea Fleet. "When the new scheme is completed," says Mr. Hurd, "the German Empire will have always in commission twenty-five battleships of the slower Dreadnought type, six battleships of the swifter Invincible type, together with eighteen protected cruisers." According to his information, "the Pan-Germans make no secret of the belief that we shall be unable to take the necessary steps to neutralize this movement." Why? Because England is near the end of her resources in recruiting, which Mr. Hurd denies effectively, and because England buys her naval labor in the dearest market in Europe, and cannot afford the extra expense. But can Germany go on indefinitely meeting her fixed charges for naval expansion? England's answer to the challenge has already taken the form of a plan to reorganize the home fleet on such a scale as to checkmate the German dispositions. But in future the competition will be more in pessonnel than in ships. England must have a superior standing fleet ready for active service, with coal in the bunkers and oil in the tanks, and every officer and man in his place or within call, the magazines full, and stores on board for a short and decisive campaign.

PATIENCE.

A firm, assured patience grows upon the Christian, enabling him to hold upon his way undeterred, unchilled, by whatever he may meet upon it; enabling him also, I know not to what inner music, to build up his spirit to a strength of calm, reliant conviction, even with the stones he finds there; as a brook lifts up a more clear and rapid voice for flowing over pebbles. The strain upon the inner life has passed over from self to Christ. The heart has grown wise, instructed, tolerant, tender with weakness, patient of imperfection.

How quiet such a life is! how faithful! faithful because it is so quiet; it works out, but lives and grows. The uneasy efforts has passed out of it. Unresting because it rests always, it has done with the work and anxiety; it serves, yet is not cumbered with much serving; it has ceased from that sad complaint, —"Thou hast left me to serve alone."
