The gods on high Olympus sate. Bereaming fallen man's estate. "I'll save him ere it be too late!" Cried Juniter: And, then, as if defying fate. He fashioned Her.

He took a bud from Juno's hair, A summer cloud, some vernal air.
And snow to form her bosom fair.
And stars for eyes. And zephyrs, and a touch of care To make her wise.

He took the laughter of a child.
A naisd's grace, a spirit wild
Yet innocent, a voice as mild
As waters deep.
And whatsoe'er was undefiled.
To have and keep.
All things soever pure and good
By mortals known or understood.
Aid charms of healthful solitude
And social grace.
He mingled in divinest mood
To light her face.

He took the softness of the dove, To make her gentle; looked above, As if to catch the glamor of Angelic art.
And then he breathed the breath of love

HOW ANIMALS KEEP WARM.

Why They Fluff Out Fur on Feathers or Flick Their Muscles.

One day in the early part of the winter I had my camera pointed at the distant snow covered woods, says a writer in St. Nicholas, when my attention was attracted by the sight of two rabbits crouching together at the fot of a hollow tree. I had often seen rabbits sitting in this position in a cage and know that it was a habit among the members of the rabbit family to sit side by side for mutual warmth, cometimes heads together and sometimes head to tail. Every naturalist is familiar with the fact that quail will cluster together under an overhanging bank.

naturalist told me that he once found quail in such a situation partly imbedded in the ice and frozen. appears that the birds went there for natural warmth; then came a rain, and the water, trickling down the bank, thoroughly soaked the birds, froze before morning, and thus held them prisoners thoughtful poultry man does not let his hens go around the yard in the winter, as was the old time custom, but keeps them in warm sheds with glass fronts. Hens dislike to have their feet touch snow or ice. If they do so the hens try to keep them warm by lifting up first one and then the other and holding it under the feathers. During the greater part of the day hens, when left to run about the yard, will get on a piece of wood and seemingly go to roost. they are trying to do is to keep their feet warm. The better method is to house the hens in a dry place where they can scratch clean straw and thus have exercise and at the same time keep their feet from the snow or the ice.

The cat has a similar habit of getting on a high fence or a board in some eunny place and then turning her paws inward, so that no part remains uncovered by fur and exposed to the cold.

The dog that is apparently shiver ing with intense cold is not really shivering, but is voluntarily "flick-ering" his body muscles and is thus aiding the circulation, much as the circulation in your hands is aided by rubbing them together or by rapidly opening and closing your fingers, or as the circulation in your arms is hastened by whipping them around

The thick coat of wool on the sheep is the best protective covering, not only because it prevents the cold air from touching the surface of the body but because the great amount of air entangled within it keeps the heat of the body from passing freely away, while the mass of wool itself keeps the external air from rapidly cooling the imprisoned warm air, and thus cooling the body. But when the winter is unusually severe even the sheep show their desire for warmth by crowding against a shed or a haystack to protect their faces and legs from searching wind through the wool and forces out the warm air entangled there. The gray squirrel is heavily furred in cold weather, but he delights to enuggle down in the nest within the hollow tree amid the dry graes, dead leaves and tree dust which he has collected to make his warm and cosy

Warm air is a poor conductor of heat. For this reason loose clothing is warmer than tight. The warm air between it and the skin prevents the NO MORE TRIALS BY TORTURE IN heat of the body from escaping rapidly. Birds and other animals take advantage of this law of nature. sparrow in the crevice of a wall is not only warming his feet against the currently stone but he is pretty sure to have his feathers so "fluffed" up that he seems to be much bigger than natural, because he is letting the air under his feathers get warm to protect

JUVENILE CRIMINALS IN PRISON.

(Toronto Globe) Among penologists it has long been an accepted commonplace that the herding of juvenile prisoners with veteran criminals is unspeakably barbarous and abimais is unspeakably barbarous and absurd. On any theory of the use of imprisonment this time-honored practice is absolutely indefensible. If the imprisonment is meant to be deterrent, then it fails of its object, for its certain effect is to familiarize young people with crimes worse than they have ever heard of or could even have imagined; if it is meant to be reformatory it is a still worse fail could even nave imagined; if it is meant to be reformatory it is a still worse fail-ure, because it converts a first offender who might be saved into a hardened criminal beyond the reach of rescue.
