THE WHITE PERIL.

Consumption Must Be Prevented Rather Than Cured.

STAMP OUT THE INFECTION.

Unless the Germs of the Disease in the Habitation, Whether It Be House or Tent, Are Utterly Destroyed Fresh Air and "Cures" Avail Little.

There is no cure for tuberculosis, and probably never will be, accepting the word "cure" in the sense of some special medicine. A disease prevented is better than cured, for no one is so well off physically or financially after any illness, and particularly does this apply to tuberculosis. The successful prevention of a disease does away with any need for its "cure." This is well exemplified in the case of yellow fever. We have never succeeded in finding a cure for that former scourge of the south, but we have done far better. We have wiped out the disease bodily, bag and baggage, by simple preventive methods.

So writes Dr. F. C. Walsh in the Technical World Magazine, and he declares that notwithstanding the "optimists," the disease is on the increase. He singles out and lays great stress on the fact that consumption is a contagious disease and on the contention that it is not contracted to any great extent through infected milk or even by the using the drinking cups that consumptive use or through the "spitting nuisance." Its spread is through the infection of the habitation. Here is one of his parables:

Brown had moved in the month of May into a house in another part of the town where he had always lived. By fall he had contracted tuberculosis. It was discovered later that several different families who had occupied this same house in succession had lost several members from tuberculosis. No attempt had ever been made to disinfect the house. Brown went to a far western state, pitched his tent on a certain spot, and never made any change from that one spot until his death. Note that fact. As a result the soil over which he slept night after night became saturated with the accumulated germs which he expelled in coughing, so that he was continually at night rebreathing into his system the very "seeds" which cause the disease. He was repositing himself nightly and didn't know it. His system would have been able to throw off the original "germ poison" which it contracted, but it was not strong enough to withstand a new dose of the poison every night. Had he changed the location of his tent daily he could have slept each night in an atmosphere practically germ free.

Jones is another victim. He goes to the same state. He has an idea that he can get along without any tent and sleeps with only the stars above, rolled up in his blanket. He naturally moves from place to place, each day sleeping on new and different ground each night. He ends by being cured.

Smith has the disease and goes to the west. He feels and looks in perfect health long before a year is gone. He returns home, satisfied that he is cured. In less than four months he is again in the tenacious clutches of the disease.

There is a lesson in this. The open air treatment is all right, but it must be carried out by right methods. All early cases of consumption which have failed to recover by outdoor treatment must lay the blame to faulty treatment. Jones, who recovered, you will remember, did change his location every day, having no tent to bother him, and in doing so avoided the fatal mistake of Brown.

How about Smith? The case of Smith is of the greatest importance. He had recovered, you will remember, and returned to his home feeling fine—back to what? To the very same plague ridden room in which he had first contracted the disease—a room reeking with tubercular germ life and which had been occupied. It was learned later, by five different consumptives at various times. The disease got a hold on him a second time for the simple reason that he came back to the original source of his disease. He should have sought new quarters, or else the house, and particularly the room he occupied, should have been disinfected before being occupied by him or any one else. These three cases cited are but typical instances. There are thousands upon thousands of Browns, Joneses and Smiths living and dying this very day whose story, if told in its true light, would match exactly the simple but pathetic history of these three men.

The thing that the doctor brings out is that consumption must be prevented rather than cured; that prevention is easy and cheap and lies in disinfection. This, in the case of the consumptive's quarters, he insists, should be at least once a week. The formula is simple: "Fumigate every room in the house with a vapor given off by heating formaldehyde; wash all the floors, windows and woodwork with mild solutions of corrosive sublimate and water." Fresh air, either at home or elsewhere, he establishes, is in itself insufficient.

He reaches the conclusion that the very existence of the hope of a "cure" has been responsible for increase of the disease. He urges people to flee from consumption by killing it in the germ that lurks in house or ground.

Think all you speak, but speak not all you think.—Delaine.

Infantile Paralysis Traced to Cat

Springfield, Mass., August 21—Officials of the Health Department believe they have traced the source of infantile paralysis to the common house cat. The Department has discovered well-developed cases in cats, and will send several of them to Boston for observation. The fly has been held responsible for contagion hitherto, but the Health Department believes the burden will be shifted to the cats.

Sad and Serious

Young man, do you ever sit down and think seriously for a minute at a time? You may be well now, and earning good wages, but how much are you saving? are you waiting anxiously for pay day? If sickness should overtake you, have enough money to keep you in enforced idleness for a month without going into a debt you may never pay. This is a sad thought, but the most solemn warning may not cause you to think seriously until it is forever too late. The thoughtless reader will put this down as a foggy idea and laugh at the writer, but we know for a fact that far too many take no thought of the future. Young girl, are you not doing a foolish thing to tie yourself down to a life of misery with a young man who doesn't know enough to make provision for a rainy day? Are you not partly to blame for giving foolish young men encouragement in their foolishness? Do you want to marry a young man and take him to your parents' home the first time he meets with an accident, or happens to be laid up through sickness of any kind? Don't! If you value your future happiness, chase after the young men who has some "go" in him. The young man who can shine in company is often very short of polish when he is in his own home. Old man, you who have reached the age when you should be able to take things easy, but can't afford to do so, do you ever think of the mis-spent hours and squandered money that would serve you a good purpose now if you had it? When you have to turn out of bed every morning, wet or dry, out or in, do you think of hours of ease and comfort you might now enjoy were it not for the improvidence of your younger days? It's too late now, old man, for you to benefit, but the younger generation should learn something from your experience and escape the rocks on which you made shipwreck.

Laundering Filthy Lucre

The United States Government has in operation in the Treasury Department at Washington a laundry machine for the washing and laundering of dirty bank bills. The machines will wash paper money on a large scale and at so low a cost that it is estimated the Government will ultimately save as much as a million dollars a year through the economical process. Banks, too, will be enabled to effect big savings. The essential feature of the machine consists of tiers of copper rollers set in an oblong framework, weighing about eight hundred pounds, which may be raised or lowered in three seconds, and which, when in position for washing operation, fits snugly into a one hundred gallon tank, filled almost to overflowing with a solution in which is dissolved a special soap the formula of which was discovered by Government officials. Passing back and forth over the rollers is what appears to the ordinary observer to be a web of cotton duck, which is in reality two of these endless bands, fitting snugly one on top of the other. Between these two duck belts, each six feet in length, travel the bills to be cleaned, and the washing or scrubbing is accomplished by the passage over the successive rollers, all of which are so shaped as to impart a peculiar rubbing motion to the soiled currency. When the washing is completed the bill is, in similar manner, swished back and forth through the clear water of a sixty-gallon rinsing tank. Then a jet of airwhisks it to another end less band of duck which leads over gas-heated drums that dry the paper and in an interval of less than two and a half minutes the rejuvenated bank-note is automatically delivered to a tray. A supplementary machine irons the laundered bills by passing them on duck aprons over heated drums and then subjecting each bill in turn to the pressure of compressed paper drums. Each machine requires but two operatives—a girl to feed the bill and another to keep the bills and another to keep watch that the crisp money is ejected properly at the completion of the operation.

Going to Church

There's a million excuses for sleeping late Sunday morning and none of them's any account. It's just laziness. That's what it is. We're all of us lazy, more or less, mostly more, and it's a powerful belle quit ringer, but, all the same, children, it's a bad habit to get into. ain't a pillar of the church, and I reckon if they was to send out a search party after new deacons I'd be about the last man they'd pick, but I come to the conclusion a long time ago that the church is a mighty good thing to hitch on to, whether you're figurin' on happiness in this world or the next. I don't mean to say that the church'll carry a man into heaven. Not by a long jump. Anybody can join the church, but gettin' through the pearly gates is a different proposition. Some of the meanest, no' countest people I ever had any dealin's with belong to the church, and if I thought they had through tickets to the green fields of Eden I'd want to go the other way. But I know they haven't. I know they'll all be brushed off when they try to come under the wire at the finish, and so the things they do and the things they say don't bother me a little bit. On the other hand, I believe a man or a woman, if they've got the right kind of a disposition and the necessary stiffness of backbone, can worry along through life and get satisfactorily settled in the hereafter without a yerp from the church. But—and I can't make that "but" too strong—its only one in a thousand who can do that. The other 999 need some help to keep 'em from wanderin' off the straight away track that leads to happiness and peace and everything else that's worth havin'.—Conrad Joon Sneed.

A Dukedom for Arthur of Connaught

The Pall Mall Gazette this evening states that Prince Arthur of Connaught will receive a signal honor in the shape of a Dukedom on his return from Japan. It is probable the title, which will carry a seat in the House of Lords, will be the Duke of Kent.

Worked Sweet Charity to Swindle Merchants

It was reported yesterday that several Main street merchants, Galt, had fallen victims to a clever woman swindler. The way the woman got the money, it is said was by presenting a letter of introduction with the signature of the Secretary of a local charitable organization on it, asking for assistance. The woman on presenting it asked that the contribution be made by check, and in most cases the sum was $5. Suspicious were aroused when it was learned that in the evening the woman would call in different stores and ask that the checks given her by other merchants be cashed.

Knill's Favorite Duty.

Sir John Knill, the retiring Lord Mayor of London, has been very popular during his year at the Mansion House.

The duties of a Lord Mayor are manifold. Some chief magistrates may find their principal interest in the numerous brilliant banquets they have to attend—some costing as much as $50,000, and, on rare occasions, no less than $250,000; others take great delight in organizing gigantic charity undertakings; but Sir John Knill's favorite duty has been presiding at the Mansion House Police Court. He takes the keenest interest in this work, and has never, unavoidably, missed a day's sitting.

It is not generally known that the Lord Mayor has to attend at the Old Bailey on the opening day of each session, the Sword of Justice being placed behind him.

For Dainty Handkerchiefs.

Delicate handkerchiefs can be done up easily at home, and careful handling causes them to wear much better. Wet them, rub each gently over with good white soap and soak in tepid water overnight. Squeeze out (do not wring), put them in a small enameled pan and cover with cold water and half a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Boil slowly, pour into a basin, add cold water and squeeze out all soap.

Next immerse them in clear tepid water and rinse about in this; then plunge into cold water tinged with blue. Leave in this for half an hour, squeeze and dip into a slight stiffening (one teaspoonful of corn flour to a breakfast cupful of boiling water).

Squeeze and roll careful each handkerchief in a towel and iron with a moderately hot iron.

Of Some Benefit.

Barber—Did that bottle of hair restorer I sold you do any good?
Customer—Yes, indeed. It kept me from wasting my money on any more.

Old Fashioned.

"Old fashioned people?"
"Very. He and his wife are chums."

"Thirst" Incidents Which Have Come Down in History.

The proposal of the Dutch to erect at Zutphen a statue to Sir Philip Sidney recalls to mind the world-famed episode of the dying soldier, with which his death is inseparably connected. It occurred when that Paladin on September 23, 1566, received his death wound before the walls of Zutphen. Parched with thirst, he called for a drink.

As he was putting the bottle to his mouth his eyes fell upon a desperately wounded soldier, who as he was being carried past threw him longing glances. "Which Sir Philip possessing, took the bottle from his lips before he drank and delivered it to the poor man with these words: "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine."

In the murder of Edward the Martyr in 979 a cup of wine played a tragic part. Wounded with the hunting, the young monarch was persuaded to seek refreshment at Corfe Castle, in Dorsetshire. He absconded with his step-mother, the widowed Queen, Elfrida. Upon his entrance she greeted him with a kiss and then, as he resisted her invitation to dismount, brought from the castle a goblet of wine. Even as the King raised it to his lips one of her retainers drew his dagger and with fatal effect plunged in into his back.

Every June the quaint old town of Rothenburg celebrates by a costume festival which goes by the name of "Meister-Drank" the mighty feat of a former town councillor who in 1691 saved the town from destruction. In that year Rothenburg fell before the arms of the savage Tilly, who at the head of the forces entered the vanquished town, where at the town hall he gave orders for the execution of the civic magistrates. Before, however, the doomed men were led forth to the scaffold the burgomaster's daughter presented herself bearing an immense flagon of wine, out of which the conqueror drank and passed it around to his officers.

All quenched their thirst and yet the flagon was only half empty. Seeing this, the fair Hobe remarked that one of the councillors present was able to empty the stoup at a draught. "If such be the case," cried Tilly, turning to the condemned magistrates, "I will pardon you all for the drinker's sake. Fill the flagon to the brim."

This was done, and then one of the city's magistrates, stepping forward seized the vessel, raised it to his lips, and neither drew breath nor set it down until he had quaffed its contents to the last drop. Then only did he reverse the flagon in proof that the feat had been accomplished. Tilly kept his word, and every year in commemoration of their deliverance do the citizens of Rothenburg enact over again this famous event in their town's history.

The Correspondence of Royalty.

If one were asked to speculate as to the sovereign whose daily mail bag was the greatest one would hazard the Kaiser, says The London Globe. But no. Then most will say it ought to be. On the unimpeachable authority of a Paris contemporary we learn that the Pope is the recipient of the greatest number of missives. The mail of his holiness consists on the average of 23,000 letters, newspapers, etc. To go through this mass 35 secretaries of the United States receives nearly 1,000 letters daily and about 4,000 journals and books. The Kaiser's mail consists of 4,000 letters and frequently the same number of books and papers. Our King, we learn, is favored with 1,000 letters a day and over 2,000 newspapers and books. The Czar is not overworked in this respect for a sovereign, his majesty's mail being given at 650 letters, etc., per day. The kings of Italy and Spain have to deal with about 300 letters each. Queen Wilhelmina is still more favored, with 150 letters, etc. But President Fallieres is still more fortunate, for we are told that he receives few letters and hardly any papers.
