Value Of Space

SPACE VALUE IN THE JARVIS RECORD is worth more to those wishing to reach the homes of Jarvis than by any other method or use. This journal goes into all the homes all the time. It is appreciated and READ BY HUNDREDS.

If you want to rent an office, home, etc., there is no better way than through these columns. Likewise the sale or attention of any article. It is true our rates are just a little higher than some other journals, but value counts. There is more value in JARVIS advertising than the rate warrants. Try us!

Keeping Your Own Counsel

"Thy friend has a friend, and thy friend's friend has a friend; be discreet," says the Talmud, and a very significantly worded piece of admonition it is. One's friends may usually be classed something after this fashion: Those who under sufficient pressure, will tell anything they know, justifying themselves perhaps by the excellent character of the person they tell to; those who never have known and never will know those concerned; those who forget they promised not to tell; those who have sense enough not to tell even though no promise be exacted, and, last of all, the one friend over whose tongue you can exercise absolute control—yourself. This doesn't take in, of course, the host of talkers of various sorts who aren't your friends at all.

The person of the first class, you may say, is no true friend, but that is not necessarily so. She is, very likely, deeply interested in the affairs, particularly the lovely affairs—of her friends, sympathetic, a tempting confidante, and with every intention of keeping your secret. But, while it is fresh in her mind, along comes another friend—not your friend, but a tale of woe or wonder almost equal to your own. Just to show how these sad and strange things do befall the best of people, your friend says: "Why there's Mary M.; you know what a fine girl she is, well, wait till I tell you the experience I had with her." Your friend's friend, not being your friend, has no restraining sense of loyalty towards you, so the next time your little secret illustrates a point in her conversation she uses it. She may add a futile "don't tell" or she may not. And that is the way your private affairs become the property of the community.

As for the second girl, she needs this advice. Don't tell anyone anything because she don't know the people involved or their friends. You never can tell. If she doesn't know them to-day she may to-morrow.

The girl who forgets that she promised is a most exasperating person, and taxes your friendship to the utmost. She repeats your secrets in your very ears, and before the very people that it particularly "riles" you to have them know them. And when you say: "Oh, Jane, I asked you not to tell that," and write in spirit at the thought of who she told it to, she is so sorry, and if you are foolish enough to give her the chance does the same thing over again.

The friend who tells everything she knows excepting names may be a very harmless person—but she is an interesting talker and always gets an audience. You know exactly the way her eyes widen when she warms up to her subject, and the way you—and the other person—lean forward and listen and, subconsciously adjust and apply the information when she says: "He is engaged to a Toronto girl and he isn't in love with her." It was all a fearful mistake. You see he was taking a post graduate course at X where he has a sister living, and this girl was visiting his sister—and so on, and on, and on, ending up with: "But of course he is too honorable to break it off." Does she imagine that everybody would be listening with their mouths open if they did not have a shrewd suspicion of who this young man is? And, moreover, by the time you have listened to two or three more of her kind you'll probably know who the girl is, too. This is the way she who doesn't tell names guards the confidences of her friends.

The girl whose secret-keeping stops with never telling what she has promised not to tell is a dependable person—but with a lack. You cannot talk straight out to her, with her restraint, because she isn't sensitive to what is a familiar, outspoken expression from friend to friend, and what is, on the contrary, an opinion that you might reveal to anybody. Since one cannot punctuate any real communion of spirit with: "Don't tell this," "that's a secret," and "of course I mean this for you only," nor yet really enjoy a companionship in which the need of such warnings is felt, even though not expressed, this dull and unimaginative friend must take a second place in your affections.

The friend with whom you may think along and with no fear of misunderstanding and no remotest dream of having anything repeated, the friend who knows as well as you do yourself, what is just talk, and for anybody, and what concerns your family, your friends or your heart, deeply and intimately, and is for her alone, is the friend of friends. There aren't more than one or two such friendships in a lifetime: It is reasonable to believe they cannot exist unless you are the same kind of friend in return, and they cannot be too highly prized.

And before going any further, don't forget that to your friends one of these people is you. Which is it? Here is food for reflection, perhaps. As to yourself—Seneca says: "If you wish another to keep a secret, first keep it yourself." Of course there are many things that any woman with any reticence must keep to herself, and, of course, we are often told that when your friend, however good a friend she may be, marries, she will tell the secrets of your heart to her husband, but in spite of all this one cannot but feel that there are friends, or, at least there is one friend with whom, as Emerson says one may "think aloud."

Why He Was Late.
"What made you so late?"
"I met Smithson."
"Well, that is no reason why you should be an hour late getting home to supper."
"Know, but I asked him how he was feeling, and he insisted on telling me about his stomach trouble."
"Did you tell him to take Chamberlain's Tablets?"
"Sure, that is what he needs." Sold by All Dealers.

"My little son had a very severe cold. I was recommended to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and before a small bottle was finished he was as well as ever," writes Mrs. H. Silks, 29 Dowling Street, Sydney, Australia. This remedy is for sale by All Dealers.
