A few days before the steamer sailed from Havre its captain received a letter from a peasant woman of Indre-et-Laire. The cross came in due time, a simple ernss of wood, fashioned rudely enough by the mother's fingers, and one night, as the great vessel neared Newfoundland, for the space of a minute her engines ceased to pulse and the little wooden cross, weighted with lead, sank beneath the waves of the Atlantic. -Paris con Philadelphia Telegraph.

to the steps to be taken to overcome Journey to Water When They Leave Lofty Nests.

> Somebody, Burroughs, I believe, said the notion that the mother duck takes the young birds one by one in her beak and carries them to the creek is doubtless ennoneous." I could not see how else it could be done, writes a contributor to the Youth's Companion, and I spent several valuable days of several different years in trying to > find out how it was done. The thing that puzzled me was how the mother wood duck (Aix sponsa) managed to get her numerous progeny down from their lofty cradle and upon the water without injuring them. I was not alone in my ignorance; some very eminent ornithologists have wondered about the matter as well. After a five mile pull one hot June day I let my boat lie in the shade or some lofty cottonwoods that grew on the lake shore, while I lay back and watched the play of shadows on the calm water.

A splash near by attracted by attention, and I looked around to see a mother wood duck just alighting. There was a little one by her side, but did not see how it got there. In a moment the old duck rose, circled a few times to gain altitude, and made direct for a hole in a large dead tree a few rods away. The hole was at ! least sixty feet from the ground. The duck squeezed her body through the opening and disappeared. She came back in a few moments with a duckling in her mouth. After resting for a moment she came sailing down and placed this baby beside the first. One after another she carried down the entire brood of eleven little yellow and black fluffy balls. They flapped their tiny wings and fluttered in the water as if that were not the first time they had ever been in swimming. The mother duck returned once more to the tree to make sure that she had not overlooked one, came backs placed herself at the head of the procession, called softly to her babies and swam away, followed by the entire family in single file. It is not difficult to give jewelry a rich lustre if the articles are rubbed with a cloth wet with alcohol diluted one-half. Then it should be rubbed dry with a soft cloth.

Largest of Extinct Animals.

The German expedition sent out to East Africa several years ago by the University of Berlin, and which is still at work in the Hinterland, has made a preliminary report, in which it is stated that although the explorers have so far found no complete skeleton of any large Dinosaurs, enough has been unearthed to prove that the largest African animals of that kind exceed by far the mightiest of North American Dinosaurs.

It is thought that the largest attained almost twice the length of the Diplodocus, of which there is a cast in the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, and which was eighty feet long. The neck of this reptile, Gigantosaurus, appears to have been at least fifteen feet longer than that of the Diplodocus and a good deal thicker, as the vertbrae are nearly twice as high as in the American monster. "Dull-witted giants" they have been called, with necks nearly forty feet long and six feet thick. with length of legs exceeding any known size.

But in their neighborhood was a reptilian fauna, almost more diverse than the assemblage of animal life in Africa to-day-the dragon tribe, large and small, herds of armed Dinosaurs, terrible in shape, with mighty spines ians, and others that flew, and the fearsome carnivorous reptiles, which ers. would attack anything except, perhaps, a Gigantosaurus.—London Post.

An experimental street car known as the articulated car has just been put into service on one line in Boston. This car, according to Popular Mechanics, embolies a number of new features making for safety, comfort and convenience, of passengers. As the name articulated indicates, the car is jointed, which enables a car of large capacity to be used on tracks having sharp curves without dangerous overhang of cars, and is, therefore, particularly well adapted to meet the conditions in Boston, which is famous for its narrow and crooked streets.

BUFFALO ROADS.

Builder.

The buffalo was good surveyor, since its instinct led it to take the easiest and most direct paths over high and Lansing, who have given study to this matter, assure us that the buffalo observed something like the principles that to-day govern the operations of the civil engineer.

The explorers who landed on the southern shores of Lakes Erie, Michigan and Superior, very soon observed the buffalo reads or 'traces.' Sometimes these were narrow ditches, a foot wide and from six inches to two feet deep, trodden down by the impact of thousands of hoofs, as herd after herd of bufalos had stamped along in single file behind their leaders.

When the first path became too deep for comfort, by reason of repeated travel, the bison would abandon it and begin a second path alongside the first, and thus the frequented traces would be gradually widened. Or an immense of these heavy animals would herd crash through the forest, breaking in their rapid progress a broad, deep road from one feeding ground to another. Inasmuch as this route would be followed again and again by this and other herds, it would become quite Tevel and as har das a rock. 'The consequence was that the pioneer roadmakers always greeted with joy the sight of a buffalo road. The line of many of these roads is followed to-day by railways and canals, just as in the old days it was followed by the log roads and turnpikes.

The buffalo followed the level of the valley. He swerved round high points whenever it was possible, crossing the ridges and watersheds at the best natural divides and gorges. He crossed from one side of a stream to the other repeatedly in order to avoid climbing up from the level, after the manner of our modern loop railways.

MORE EXPENSIVE PEARLS.

The cost of wearing pearls has risen because the oysters that produce pearls are going on strike and the cost of livng for the pearl divers is higher, Those who should know say that oysters seem to have been unusually successful in rec-ent years in expelling from their shells the foreign bodies that cause the growths resulting in pearls.

Even the pearl fishers find that the cost of living is greater than in former days. In this case the word "living" may be taken in a literal sense, since the occupation of pearl diving results in ailments, genrally of a paralytic nature, which the natives in pearl fishing districts now treat in their atempts to ward off total disability and death. Greater care is taken now than formerly in making pearl necklaces for the reason that present day tastes demand absolute uniformity of color and form. Necklaces of former generations are rarely homogeneous. Even in such necklaces as the famous one in the Louvre a $10,000 pearl may be seen next one worth no more than $100 or so -New York Sun.
