Seven young boys were taken before a Baltimore judge the other day, charged with ridiculing and annoying an old woman of the neighborhood who does not understand English. The judge might have sent them to a reformatory, or put them in charge of a probation officer, or let them off with a scolding and a threat of dire consequences if they were brought before him again.

But he was wiser than the average judge. He proceeded, with due form and ceremony, to swear in each of the seven lads as a special police officer whose sole duty it would be to protect the old woman from insult and injury. Then he told them how Hercules learned to treat every woman as a mother and every girl as a sister, and sent them forth in their new role, with instructions to return and make a full report in a month.

One of the clubs in the National Baseball League this year has a total abstinence clause in the contract that all the players must sign. Hitherto "moderate drinking" by a professional athlete has not been considered inconsistent with his keeping "fit" but evidently the professional player is now to be asked to adopt the high standard of the amateur. And in the more serious business of life, where competition is even keener than athletics, it is becoming harder and harder for the drinking man to get or keep employment. Efficiency is the thing that counts, and drinking reduces it.

Those who were fortunate in attending the "At Home" given by the Women's Institute, on Tuesday evening, in the Music Hall, ascribe it as the best ever given by this branch. The tables were bountifully spread with fowl, meats, salads, pies, and cake of every description, in fact nothing was lacking to tempt the most delicate appetite. After the guests (which numbered about 150) had been served a varied program was rendered, consisting of instrumental music, solos, readings and addresses, J. J. Parsons, Reeve of Walpole, presenting the different numbers. It was a late hour when the gathering broke up and one and all were loud in their praise for the manner in which the "At Home" was conducted and brought to successful issue. Our ladies certainly deserve all the credit extended them.

Life with all its stern realities, occasionally breaks out in a halo of light and joy in the distance and we dwell in the realms of ecstasy for a time. Perhaps the pleasant event at Robert A. McCarter's home on Saturday evening, Feb. 18th, was the counterpart of this when a score or more of friends announced their presence at the door to spend a social hour with them in their cosy little home, in honor of the event of Mr. and Mrs. McCarter reaching the 30th anniversary of their marriage.

The evening, which was spent in music and games, was most thoroughly enjoyed and the refreshments highly refreshing. Before dispersing the guests gave expression to the enjoyable evening spent by them, and wishing Mr. and Mrs. McCarter many happy returns of the day. The Record joins in extending congratulations and may "Bob" and his estimable wife all many years and be endowed with all the happiness and prosperity, coupled with good health, that this old world affords.
