Favorites For Misses and Little Girls.

White fox furs (and other furs that look like for remain the favorite for misses' and little girls' wear. There are millinery these are nearly always used, and as fox is a soft fur, they answer very well for the white sets worn by children and misses."

There is a fad just now for velvet hats with Tam crowns having a fox tail at the side for trimming. The smartest have plain brims like a narrow-brimmed, slongated sailor shape and a full crown But narrow drooping brims or plaited fills about 'the face are selected for more youthful wearers.

For a little girl, hats are entirely or partially covered with fur. Sometimes the crown ie of fur and the brim of velvet or plush. Such hats are trimmed with ribbon in bows or rosettes, often eleverly finished with cobochons of fur. This combination makes a very durable kat.

A white fox set is sometimes worn with a plush turban finished with bows of plush. The searf is short and full, with a tail at one end and head with paws at the other. The ample half-flat muff is also finished with garniture of a head and a persant tail with paws. Another fur which is favored for young people and children, is that of the equirrel. This is made up for them in the natural gray. It is especially good olor and in the Siberian squirrel shows at its best. There is a hint of blue in it. logolder people it is usually dyed, but axistious long coats are made of natural skins. Coats made of squirrel fur are worn by little girls, and in the coldweather the little ones are entirely comfortable in them. There are many good plushes also that are almost as warm as fur.

These plushes are altogether desirable for neckpieces and muffs for children, and mines, as for grown-ups. Certain fasaties, as chinchilla, bear and regulatten silk plushes in colors, are made for children's wear. They have the advantage of great durability and can be quite successfully cleaned.

Besides these furs and fabrics, neck prieces and muffs with caps to match are eracheted or knitted of yarns made for the purpose. These are very handsome. The sets made of plush are not diffient to make, patterns may be found for in any of the standard makes. The fiels for muffs can be bought ready made made at home.—Woman's World for Tanary.

SPELLING WITHOUT DRUDGERY.

Miss Haynes, a Boston school teacher. should have a monument raised to her memory by the boys and girls of the world. She has devised a way of "teaching spelling without drudgery." Her pupils range from five to six years and she has made each one of them to represent a letter of the alphabet, and the class spends its time in playing a game called "putting the letters together." The consonants are all cousins, and the vowels are all long brothers or short brothers, representing the different pronunciations of the letters. The child who represents double-o wears a green coat because of the pigeons that coo in the green trees. There is a hint from which the whole game may be constructed.

YE WAISTLESS GOWN.

It is Nothing as Frightful as it

Sounds. A waistless evening gown does not sound attractive, but it is the most attractive of modes in reality, and when cut and draped by a master hand gives an air of symmetry to the figure which is superior to that given by any other fashion. When cut by a master hand there is nothing bulky, and the frock gives height and dignity to the small figure and an added grace to the tall woman.

These new modes require very careful corseting to preserve their lines; and when attention is paid to detail they are very much on the lines of the ancient classic figure without the same accentuation of hips.

This waistless frock is very good for dancing in, as there is no pressure anywhere, and it is not as heating as a wn that is gathered in at the waist. They really amount to skirts cut high, the bodice being of tulle.

Two Essentials.

The essential things which distinguish one individual from another, which give one man a higher place among his fellows and another a lower, are just two: First of all perseverance—the ability to keep everlastingly at it: and, secondlv. imagination or vision—the ability to see beyond the present moment, and to understand that the work at hand reaches beyond the present moment, and so is worth while.-St. Nicholas.

Smart Boudoir Cap.

If a woman has skillful fingers there is no reason why she should not be able to fashion the most fascinating boudoir-caps for herself, and hereby save very considerably on her dress allowance, for it is astonishing how little things have a tendency to mount up quickly. One can evolve all sorts of combinations and designs, which can be worked out with net and insertion and adittle lace, if so desired. One seen the other day, had been made of ordinary net with imitation Valenciennes insertion, the width of the cap being regulated by pale blue ribbons which tied in a big bow under the chin or at the side, as fancy dictated.

MANUALS THAT PLY.

Rarely Seen.

The name flying equirrel is given to many species of little mammals found in different parts of the world, all belonging clearly to the rodent animals of the squirrel tribe, but having scarcely any point of resemblanc, except the existence of a membrane which extends the skin from the flanks and performs the functions of a parachute.

The curious flying equirrel of Australia dwells in trees, seeks its at night and feeds on insects, berries and the eggs of small birds.

It has a fleecy fur of whitish gray tinged with red. Its long bushy tail with prehensile extremity serves as a rudder when it flies from one tree to another and also enables it to cling to the branches while having free use of its feet. It has a ventral pouch for carrying the immature young.

It is almost impossible to study manners of this nocturnal animal, we have a limited knowledge of habits. It passes the entire day in its nest, a hole dug in the top of a tree. Naturaliste declare that this squirrel never drinks, in fact, that it never drinks, in fact, that it never descends to the ground. After sunset one can hear its cry, which resembles the twittering of a bird. On a moonlight night a very quiet observer may see the graceful evolutions of the little creatures fluttering in the air. They spring from the top of a tree and by stretching their four feet extend the folds of the membrane. The strange parachute slack ens the descent and the squirrel lands on a branch without the slightest shock to it as a result of its leap through space. Observers do not agree on the maximum flight of these animals, but it appears to have been proved that they can fly a distance of from seventyfive to one hundred feet, though some claim for them a much greater distance. It is quite possible, of course. that various ones of these animals may vary in their leaping capacity.

Like all nocturnal mammals. the do not thrive in captivity, even in their native country, and therefore one rarely sees them in zoological gar-dens.—Technical World Magazine.

Colonial Secretary for Ceylon, presided at the meeting, and a number of problems in arithmetic were put to the boy through an interpreter. In each case, says the Ceylon Morning Leader, he gave an answer in a few seconds.

Among the questions were the following: Add together 8,596,713,826 and 96. 268.593. Multiply 45,989 by 864,726. Find the fifth root of 69,343,957. The following problem, put in by a number of the audience, was answered in under three seconds: A Chetley gave as a treat to 173 persons a bushel of rice each; each bushel contained 3,431,272 grains, and the Chetty given to the temple. An interesting new type of automobile fire engine for Paris has just been decided upon by the municipal council. The machine will be of specially light construction, and will carry four men only, but will be fitted with a large tank, containing 400 liters of water. Thus, as the engine arrives on the scene of fire, it can begin pumping water while the firemen are making the necessary connection at the nearest main with a minimum waste of time. The new pattern is a vast improvement on the cumbersome automobile fire engines which the Paris brigade possesses at present. and which in the future will be used only as auxiliaries in exceptionally large
