October

(By Doris Webb.)

Bright October, torch in hand,
Crossed the land,
And she touched a sunlit spire
With her fire.
Then the blaze of red and yellow
In the trees,
Running riot, leapt and trembled,
In the breeze.
Fair Virginia creeper sprays
Caught the blaze,
And from out the grass there came
Jets of flame,
Till at last the burnt-out leaves
Of cracking brown,
On the chilly wind of autumn
Fluttered down.

There is often a great rush of work to be done late in the autumn. Then it is that work horses perspire most freely, and then it is that they are often exposed to cold, chilling winds or drafts after the day's work. It is well to get plenty of fresh air into the horse stable, but avoid cold drafts which blow directly upon horses which have their coats wet with sweat. Close doors to avoid drafts.

It is surely no small thing to have enjoyed until the middle of October, practically undiminished, the beauty and fragrance of the flowers.

From time to time we have to decline obituary verses that are sent to us for insertion. For various reasons they are not a form of contribution that is encouraged by most newspapers, however much the editor might sympathize with the bereaved. Some publishers will not insert them at all. Others charge the advertising rate of ten cents a line (which is nearly prohibitive) and we belong to the latter class.

A new continent has been discovered north of Siberia, but it is not likely to affect the coat of living very appreciably and the flood of printed matter, much of which is incomprehensible, and the endless harangue from public platforms by those who feel the high prices most, are likely continue unabated in an effort to educate the man on the land to produce more abundantly the necessities of life that the agitators may live in greater ease and assurance.

We Want News

The Record would like to make it plain that it welcomes the news of all sections of the country. If there is a small village, or corner not represented by a correspondent, it will welcome correspondents so inclined to take up the work. Writing to newspapers, not only helps to keep the people in touch one with the other, but it also helps the writer in that he or she is acquiring considerable valuable education and experience. If you have a piece of news jot it down and send it to The Record. Give us the news. Sign your name on all correspondence, not for publication, but so the editor will know with whom he is talking.

The Postmaster General has decided to increase the minimum salaries of postmasters to $50 per annum, and the necessary legislative action is to be taken at the next session of parliament. It is high time rural postmasters should receive more remuneration, and as the salary cannot be termed an extravagant one, how in the world a postmaster can figure any profit in the position is a mystery to us. They are obliged to provide the building, pay for their own light and heat, be responsible for the supplies sent in by the department, and be on the job practically at all hours. It is really no wonder that a number of offices have had to be closed because no one could be found to accept the position as postmaster. Any one who can make money out of the job at the advanced salary is without a doubt a financier.

Judge Douglas, who underwent a serious operation, is doing nicely and his friends are now allowed to see him.

The Cayuga Advocate has been sold by Geo. Reeves to R. H. Davey, the latter taking possession at once. Haldimand printers are sorry to lose Brer. Reeves from the district but will extend a hearty welcome to his successor.

Mrs. Jas. McConachie, through her solicitors, Murphy & Colter, has entered a claim against the Township of Oneida for damages for non-repair of a highway near Cranston. The plaintiff's horse was frightened at some material on the side of the side of the road and she was thrown out on the side of the road. Harrison Arrell is acting for the Township.

The Spice of Life

A lazy man, regarded as the village fool, was asked to lend a hand with a piece of farm work. "What'll you pay?" he asked.

Ten-day Courses in Agriculture

Winter institutes for farmers, at which ten-day courses in all kinds of rural subjects are offered, are becoming a regular feature of educational work in this country. For several years such an institute has been in operation each winter at Truro, Nova Scotia. Last year the attendance at this place numbered about 400, of whom 100 were from Prince Edward Island and a large number from New Brunswick these two provinces subsidizing all their inhabitants who wish to attend. Recently Prince Edward Island has established an institute of its own at Charlottetown. The courses offered here include livestock, poultry, horticulture, soil cultivation, seed selection, and dairying; besides women's courses in house-keeping, domestic science, etc. These courses are given free to all inhabitants of the island who care to take advantage of them, and attendance is further encouraged by a bonus of $5, together with free transportation, to anyone who makes his or her application and then completes a course satisfactorily. No examinations are held, the pupils being only required to give intelligent interest throughout the lessons; thus the older farmers, as well as the younger, are encouraged to attend. The courses, which are as practical as possible, are given by experts from all parts of Canada.
