ANSWERING A CALL

How a Labrador Doctor Went to the Missionary's Aid.

An urgent call in Labrador means not only inconvenience and hardship to the doctor and his sledge-drive, but actual danger. Nevertheless, no one ever flinches from his duty. Dr. G. E. Patton, in "Among the Eskimos of Labrador," tells of one such call. On a bitterly cold and stormy night came the message from the missionary at Hebron, seventy-one miles away, "Come, my people are dying." It was an urgent call, and there must be no delay. Quickly the dogs were harnessed to the sledge, the Eskimo drivers were in place; everything was ready.

"It was pitchy black when we started. A raw air came moaning from the east; it chilled us through our sealskins, and made our cheeks and noses ache. When I tried to warm my stiffening toes by an occasional trot alongside the sledge, I kept stumbling over jagged points of ice, until one of the men shouted, 'Sit still, or we shall be losing you!'

"After that I sat still and hoped for morning. For two solid hours the agony went on, and then a faint glimmer of grey began to show in the east; it changed to a dull red, sullen and lurid in the morning haze, and we began to see the wide stretch of white ice beside us, and a black and awful sea ahead of us. The ice in the bay had broken with the storm!

"Then we stopped our sledge and clustered together to consult about finding a road to Hebron.

"There is no road," the men said. "The ice is all broken there round the headland. Let us turn homeward."

"I know a track over the headland," said Johannes. "Let me see if we can get to it."

"He walked along the ice at the foot of the rocks, now standing for a moment, now running a few steps; he came back presently, and said, 'We can do it.'

"I think that of all my memories of Labrador the most vivid is the memory of that race along the fringe of ice at the foot of the cliffs. On the left the wall of rock rose steep; on the right the black water churned and tumbled and ground the boating ice-pans together; beneath us the thick sea ice rocked and heaved, and here and there the water came swirling through.

"Sit tight, sit tight!" said the drivers, and there we sat, bowling along over the heaving ice. Sometimes one of the men pushed out a leg to guide the sledge round a bend, or to check its speed. At the place where the guide led us on to the headland the ice was broken away from the rock, and was rising and falling with the swell. One moment it came groaning up to the level of the land; the next it sank away again. The dogs went scrambling over, glad to get on to something firm; but the drivers held the sledge back until the ice began to rise, and then with a yell they started the dogs again, and bumped across the crack just as it came up level. A second too soon, or too late would have meant smashing the front of the sledge to splinters.

"It seemed a long way over the headlands, uphill and down, and always through soft snow, sometimes so deep that the dogs had virtually to swim, because they could get no foothold. The cold air rendered Johannes frost-bound; the moisture of his breath had frozen his beard and moustache so firmly together that when lunch-time came, he could not open his mouth until we thawed him out!

"As the afternoon wore on, the dogs began to tire. The rest of us sat on our sledges until the cold began to chill us, and then ran alongside until weariness made us sit down again. Finally, in the dark of night, we got to Hebron—seventy-one miles over sea-ice and snow-covered hills."

Stead and the Titanic.

On the anniversary of the Titanic disaster incidents connected with the covering of this big news story were being recalled by a group of Montreal newspaper men, one of them being Mr. S. P. Stranger, marine reporter for The Montreal Gazette, who was given the first news of the Titanic's peril by an official of the Allan Line, who telephoned the tidings to Mr. Stranger after receiving a brief message by wireless.

"Well, Stranger," said another member of the party, "you will always have the distinction of being the first newspaper man in the world to hear of the Titanic wreck."

"Oh, no, I wasn't," said Mr. Stranger.

"Then who was?" asked the other man.

"W. T. Stead," was Mr. Stranger's reply.

Canadian Theologian Retires.

Dr. Francis L. Patton, who for the last eleven years has been president of Princeton Theological Seminary, tendered his resignation recently. Old age and failing eyesight were his reasons. He is seventy years old, and his sight has been failing for some time. For fourteen years Dr. Patton was president of Princeton University, succeeding James McCosh in 1888, and giving way to Woodrow Wilson in 1902.

Dr. Patton was born on the island of Bermuda, Jan. 23, 1838, and studied theology at Knox College, Toronto, and at Princeton, graduating from the latter institution in 1865.
