Severe Penalties

Ottawa, Sept.—Several changes in the anti-white slavery laws came into effect on September 14 as a result of legislation recently put through by the Dominion Government, and the changes are expected to fulfill their object in minimizing still further the traffic in human souls, which is more common in Canada than is generally supposed. Any person found in a disorderly house is liable to a fine of not exceeding $100 or two months in prison, and the thugs who act as bodyguard in these houses are liable to a five year imprisonment. Procurers may be sentenced no matter what age or moral character of their victims, and punishment ranges from one to five years in prison with whipping for the second offense. Another change which is being brought into effect, is a penalty of one year's imprisonment or a $500 fine to neglectful husbands and fathers.

CAUGHT A BAD COLD

"Last winter my son caught a very bad cold and the way he coughed was something dreadful," writes Mrs. Sara E. Duncan, of Tiptown, Iowa. "We thought sure he was going into consumption. We bought just one bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that one bottle stopped his cough and cured his cold completely." For sale by ALL DEALERS.

DESPONDENCY

Is often caused by indigestion and constipation, and quickly disappears when Chamberlain's Tablets are taken. For sale by ALL DEALERS.

BENEATH WAVES.

Hazardous Work of the Bluejackets Aboard Submarine

There is no more hazardous work—save, perhaps, that of the officers and men of the Royal Flying Corps—than the duties undertaken by the personnel of the submarine branch of the royal navy.

Dangerous as the work is, however, there is never any lack of volunteers ready to pass a strict medical examination. This being satisfactory, the volunteers are sent to one of the submarine depots.

With the outside appearance of a submarine most people are familiar; and, unfortunately, it is impossible, for obvious reasons, to give details of the interior arrangements of our latest under-water craft. But a description of one of the earlier types will perhaps do equally well.

We descend into the interior through the circular watertight hatch in the top of the conning-tower, and, on arriving at the bottom, find ourselves in a peculiar, cigar-shaped space which to the uninitiated eye seems crammed with complicated machinery.

Right forward in the bows come the torpedo tubes, while underneath them is the petrol tank, which supplies the motive power to the engines when the craft is traveling on the surface. A little further aft are the air-flasks, which give the crew the wherewithal to breathe when the boat is submerged.

Below the floor are the electric storage batteries for propelling the vessel when submerged, while here also are situated the trimming tanks for the purpose of sinking; the hull in the water.

The after compartment of all contains the engines, while in the stern, outside the boat, is the screw propeller and the vertical and horizontal rudders to direct the boat to the right or left, up or down, at the will of the commanding officer.

Inside, in the centre of the craft, is the conning-tower, in which the captain stands before the periscope, a long tube fitted with prisms, which enable a view of the surrounding sea to be obtained.

Let us, for a minute, imagine ourselves to be on board a submarine about to dive. All hands are on board. The conning tower hatch is closed, the tanks are filled, and, before we quite understand what is taking place, we hear a sharp order, and feel the boat's bow tilting downwards.

How far under the surface she has gone we do not know; nobody but the captain and the man at the depth-recording apparatus is aware of that.

It is exciting work, and we feel rather nervous, and wish we hadn't come. But the men betray no signs of fear; they are used to the work, and know exactly what to do; while they are fully aware of their terrible responsibility, and realise that, if a single one of them loses his head, or does the wrong thing, a terrible disaster may be the result.

As a general rule, an under-water craft cruises at a depth of about fifteen feet below the surface. If it is necessary to sink entirely out of sight, the captain has to rely upon his judgment, and come to the surface every now and then to see where he is, and to sink again as quickly as he can.

The latest submarines now being built are said to be vessels of about 1,200 tons, with a surface speed of twenty knots, and an under-water speed of half this amount, while their primary armament will be six torpedo tubes.

It is impossible to predict what dimensions submarines will one day attain, for there seems to be no limit to their size, provided always they have the necessary depth in which to operate.

When Gas Was New.

After the invention of illuminating gas early in the last century it was a long time before English people felt really at home with it. The authorities at Windsor Castle are said to have been under the impression that the gas was on fire all the way along the pipes. And The Times of July 12, 1830, contained this item: "The Duke of Wellington, when at Windsor a few days ago, directed that the gas might be cut off from the interior of the castle by the desire of the Queen, who, we understand, entertained apprehensions lest an accident might be caused by explosion. Her Majesty's wishes will, of course, be immediately complied with, and directions have already been given to the gas company for the purpose."

Early Humor.

Gladstone when a boy was visiting in the country, and the farmer was showing him around. Coming to a field that contained a large black bull, the farmer said, "There's a fine, strong bull there, Master William, and it's only two years old."

"How do you tell its age?" queried the boy.

"Why, by its horns," said the farmer.

"By its horns?" Young Gladstone looked thoughtfully a moment; then his face cleared. "Ah, I see. Two horns—two years."

Deceived by the Title.

In the titles of books lie at times pitfalls for the unwary. An almost classic example was afforded by John Ruskin when in 1851 he wrote a short pamphlet on the text, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." This, which treated of the reunion of the Protestant churches, was published as "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds"—a title which, appealing rather to the agricultural than to the clerical mind, insured a brisk circulation among farmers.

Cost of Balkan War.

It is estimated by Sir Edwin Pears, an Englishman in Constantinople, that the Turks have lost 200,000 men since the outbreak of the Balkan war, some of whom were killed in battle and others of whom died of disease or starvation. In addition, the allies captured 150,000 prisoners.
