May 2, 1915, Saul Tries to Kill David. 1 Sam, 1:9 1-24. Print 19: 1-12.

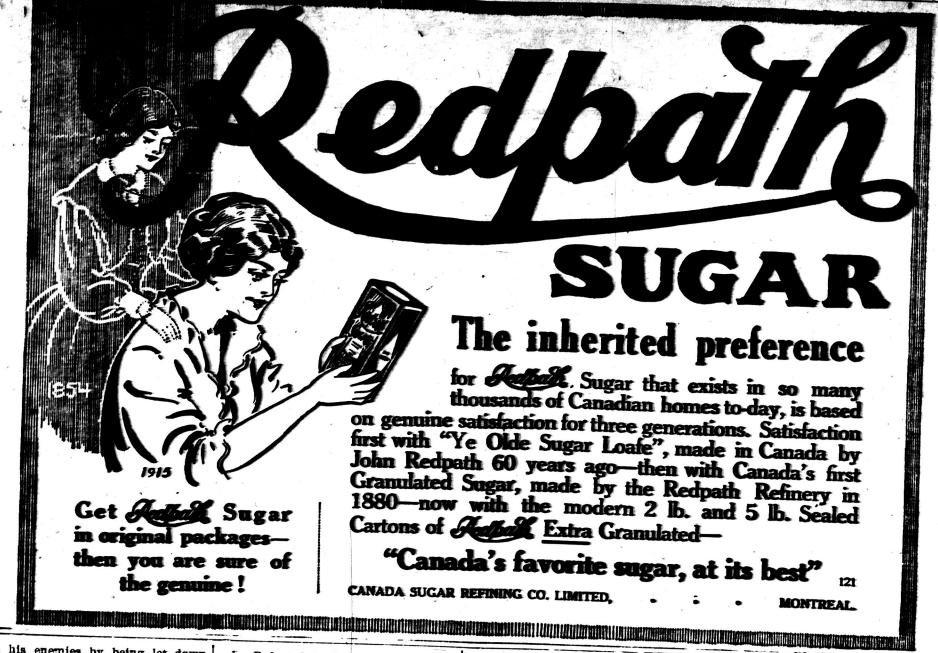

Commentary.- 1. Jonathan's care for David (vs. 1-7.) 1. That they should kill David-It was in one of his insanc fits of jealousy that Saul gave this murderous order. David continued to play on the harp before him to quiet him, but his efforts were not always successful. The records do not show that there was any fresh cause for Saul's anger. 2. Jonathan told David -David had a warm friend in the ling's court in the person of Jonathan, whose soul was kuit with the soul of David (ch. 18: 1.) The two had made a covenant of friendship and Jonathan showed aimself a true friend to David as long as he lived. He took the part of David rather than that of his insanely jealous father. Hide thyself-Since Saul had given orders to his servants as well as to Jonathan to take David's life, it was very necessary that David take the best possible precautions to protect himself. 3. in the field where thou art-Jonathan was standing between his father and David. It would seem that he wished David to know exactly what Saul's mind was regarding him, therefore he requested him to hide in such a place that he could quickly report to him what saul said. I will commune with my father of thee-Jonathan was willing to draw out his father in convertation and to plead for his friend. 4. Jonothan spoke good of David-

Had Jonathan simply advised David to flee without endeavoring to bring Saul to a better mind, he would have acted to the prejudice of his father's interests, by depriving him of the hest support of his kingdom. -Cam. Bib. What follows reveals the wisdom of Jonathan and his sense of justice. Let not the king sin against.... David. The course Saul was taking with reference to David was most unjust, and Jonathan was ready both to recognize respectfully his father? kingship and to point out the wickedness of his actions toward David. This meant much, since Saul was the father and was also king. Hath not sinned against thee-David had constantly worked for the interests of the nation, and in doing so had worked for the best interests of the king. To theeward-Toward thee. 5. Put his life in his hand—David risked his life, as he in the school of the prophets. Saul out of devetion to his country and his David, and as they came near the God. He did what no man in all the army of Israel was willing to do. The Lord wrought a great salvation for all Israel-David went forth in the name of the Lord against the Philletines' champion and the Lord gave Israel the victory as a result. Jonathan devoutly ascribed to God the honor for it. Didst rejoice—It was well for Saul to be reminded of what had been done and of how he had felt about the work David did. Innocent blood-in taking the life of David he would be shedding innocent blood.

a noble man and deserved to be heard. As the Lord liveth David? -A form of expression used to render a statement emphatic. He shall not be slain-Thus quickly was Saul's mind changed, but it was not permanently fixed. This shows his impulsiveness, which no doubt became greater on account of his malady. 7. Showed him all those things—David's relief must have been very great when he learned of Saul's changed attitude toward him; yet he must have realized that his attitude might change as suddenly again. He was in his presence, as in times past—He was Israel's great military leader, yet he employed his skill in music for Saul's Sake.

II. David's escape from Saul (vs. $-17). 8. There was war again— The Philistines had not been permanently subdued. David went out-His success in this campaign was great. He performed a most important service for Saul and his kingdom. 9. Evit spirit from the Lord was upon Saul-The Holy Spirit had been withdawn from Saul because of his disobedience to God's commands, and the Lord permitted an evil spirit to take possession of him at times. The spirit of jealousy returned and he was beside himself. As he sat, etc.—Saul, as usual, had his spear in his hand, and David was playing upon his harp in an effort to soothe the enraged king. 10. Saul sought to smite David-No promise that he had made was remembered when this new fit of anger gained control of the king. Escaped that night -Fled from the king's presence and first sought refuge in his own house. To some it seemed strange that David did not effect his escape altogether from Saul after his former attempt to smite him (ch. 18: 11); but doubtless David regarded Saul's former attack as an outburst of his madness, not flowing from any deep-seated design against his life. But now, after the startfing revelations which Jonathan had made to him of Saul's deadly purpose, he feels that his life is no longer safe in the royal court.—\Vhedon.

II. Sent messengers unto David's house-At this time Saul's purpose seems to have been firm to cause the death of David. As David had at first fled to his house, Saul hoped to have him caught there. He expected his men would guard the house to prevent David's escape. They were to take him in the morning while he was not suspecting an attack and not on his guard. Michai David's wife-She was Saul's daughter. She warned David against her father's efforts to slay him. She doubtless knew Saul's disposition better than David did. "Psalm 59 is referred to by its title to the present occasion. If this is correct, the psalm supplements the history, showing that David was in danger, not from Saul only, but from ruffians among Saul's followers who prowled about the streets of Gibeah threatening his life."—Cam. Bib. 12. Through a window—The spies escaped from Jericho through a window (Josh, 2: 15), and Paul once made his escape from his enemies by being let down from a window. If David's house was on the city wall the escape was not difficult, for the guard would likely be watching at the door of his house. 13-17. Michal took an image she had in the house and put it in David's bed and with a goat's hair pillow made a representatation of a man. She did this to deceive Saul's men and give David time to make good his escape. She also employed falsehood to explain to her father her course in allowing

David to escape. We can not approve of her deception and falsehood. III. Saul prophesying (vs. 18-24). David fled to Ramah, the home of Samuel, and told Samuel what Saul heard of it and sent men to take school of the prophets, they began to prophesy. Saul sent the second time and the third time with the same results, then he went himself, and as he drew near he also began to pro-

tion to his wicked course. QUESTIONS.—Who was Jonathan? What was his attitude toward David? How did Jonathan bring his father to feel friendly toward David? What success did David have in his war with the Philistines? What attempt did Saul make to slay David? How 6. Saul harkened—The plea of Jona- did David escape? Who was Michal? then was effectual. He had appealed Where did David go from Gibeah? to reason, to justice and to experience. With whom did he live? What came to those whom Saul sent to take aroused hostility of Saul on the one friendship on the other. Father and son were at cross purposes concerning his low cunning that Michal might bethe life of one who in the providence of (nod was to supplant them both. In also defeated, Michal's quick wit dethe progress of the conflict between ermity and friendship there was a revelation of the individual characteristics of the two men and the principles which actuated them. The ruling passion of Saul's inner life became his acknowledged master, so that murger in intent became murder avowed. He raised in Jonathan's mind the conillet between worldly, personal inverests and his fidelity of friendship. It was a deep grief to Jonathan to witness the downfall of his father in character, but to be called upon to be partaker of his sin was beyond all else. In yearning desire to save his father from continued crime and in fervent hope to spare the life of Gott's chosen one, Jonathan conversed in a kindly manner with his father, citing David's heroism in benalf of Israel and God's evident approval of him. He recailed Saul's own admiration for David, then asked if he could inflict death upon the unsatisfactory condition of the him. I. Disclosed Saul's secret plot. In dark and dangerous, but God watched tracing Saul in his progress to final over, led and defended him. Things ruin and Dacid in his accession to the permitted were to test, strengthen and pany of prophets, the only occasion throne we have here brought out the perfect his character ,however strange such providence may have seemed to side and the services of Ponathan's David. Though Saul had made him his son-in-law it was in the exercise of come a snare to him. In this he was vised the means of escape for David. deceived the messengers of Saul and invented a ready story to disarm her father's wrath. Her fear of her father was greater than her love for truth. Her love for her husband was greater than her hatred for sin. David sought Samuel whose home was the centre of spiritual influence. Life at Saul's court was out of accord with his most cherished aspirations. He was conscious of being misunderstod and misrepresented. The earlier days of quiet service and holy communion with God were but sweet memorics, bringing the bitter realities of daily life into stronger relief. What wonder that with bounding heart and rapid flight, he sought consolation, counsel and rest with the honored man who once anointed him to some unexplained service. While battles were being fought and the kingdom was troubled with times past." The change wrought was when he sent to Naioth to capture but superficial, for Saul's nature was David. It reached its highest pitch when, after three attempts to take II. Defeated by divine intervention. him, he ventured to go himself to the

It. Defeated by divine intervention. The path marked out for David was abode of Samuel. It was after long separation that Saul thus drew near to on which Samuel, David and Saul were present at the same time and place. To protect David from Saul's messengers were restrained from carrying out position to Saul's designs, the messengers weer restrained from carrying out their orders. The divine power was exercised, first upon Saul's men and then upon himself. As each band saw the venerated Samuel stand at the head of the prophets, they feared to do violence to one under such august protection. Hitherto Saul appeared to be fighting solely against David, but when the spirit of prophecy came upon his messengers and rendered them helpless, it was obvious that he was fighting against God. Such knowledge added to his mental confusion, though not sufficiently to subdue his wild passion. His bodily manifestations were not marks of grace, but indicated a moral state at variance with the Spirit of God. The experience served to change a persecuting monarch into a harmless enthusiast.
