O'LEARY COW

Celebrated Bovine Did Not Start Great Chicago Fire.

Reporter at the Scene Gives Lie to Story.

(Michael Ahern, Veteran Fire Reporter, in Chicago Tribune.)

The story , printed in some evening paper that Mrs. O'Leary, owner of the cow that kicked over the lamp which set fire to Chicago, is dead near Menominee, Mich., is slightly erroneous. It is too bad to spoil a good story, but for the sake of history the 'error' should be correct

Mrs. O'Leary (God rest her soul) has been dead these twenty years past. I was at her funeral. She was the mother of James O'Leary, commonly known as "Big Jim, the stockyards gambling king." I knew the old lady well, and often bought milk of her before the fire.

In respect to her memory I wish to refute the cow and lamp canard. Her cow did not kick over a lamp in the stable where the fire originated. At the time of the fire I was police reporter for the Morning Republican, which later became the Inter-Ocean. Johnny English was the Tribune's police reporter, and Jim Haynie was on the Times. I am the only police reporter living who helped to cover the greatest fire in the world's history.

It was Jim Haynie, I think, who "faked" the story about the cow kicking over the lamp. No newspaper was printed the morning of Oct. 9, but who have the neneral were able to get out. "extras" the cow and lamp story was given as the cause of the holocaust. In after years I met O'Leary and we talked about the fire. He told me that in his opinion it was caused by spontaneous combustion of hay A couple of weeks before the fire O'Leary had put a ton of green hay in the barn loft. It was an unusually warm, upon the roof, and that was what laid was one dollar a bottle, I mean it. Chicago in ashes, I wrote to the editor of an agricultural paper asking him if hay could catch fire from spontaneous combustion. He answered that it was a scientific fact that fires of this nature, while not common, were infrequently

Cossacks Did Not Even Commandeer Live Stock.

Leaving this central city of Galicia we traveled by special train down the valley of the Dniester to Halicz, the point that formed the extreme Russian left during the battle that extended to Krasne and was followed by the capture of Lemberg. At this quaint little village, which is about as far off the map of Europe foreigners know as any place one could locate, was a fine steel bridge which the Austrians blew up in their hurried flight to the north and west. After their heels came the Russians with their pontoon bridges. In the vanguard came three divisions of Cossack cavalry, and behind them divisions and divisions of the Russian infantry

Perhaps they did them and perhaps the Cossacks did them; in any event, it matters little, for nothing else was touched. In every field were cows, in every back yard pigs, chickens, and innumerable geese, while the fields on both sides of the road fraversed by the cavalry were dotted with the stacks of the harvest not yet taken in, but everywhere untouched. In the journey from Lemberg to Halicz the same evidence of restraint on the part of the soldiery was everywhere perfectly clear. A number of the inhabitants were questioned as to the behavior of interiors, and that little had been paid for.

I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, nor have I any scheme of prophecy to propose; but when one recalls the position of Palestine at the junction of three continents, and Esdraelon, not far from the outlets of the Bosphorus, controlling the Danube and the rivers of Russia, the Nile and the Suez Canal, and watches the movements of armies and nations in this almost universal war, one might almost think that we were approaching Har Magedon, Already German, Austrian and Ottoman soldiers are on the plain, or crossing this plain of Esdrae-Ion, Russians are pouring down through Asia Minor toward the Eastern Mediterranean; British and French soldiers are approaching Palestine. The Germans are offering a prize to the first German soldier who sets his foot on England soil. It is safe enough to offer such a prize, for even if it did happen that a German soldier landed feet foremost in England there would be little chance of his ever going back to Germany to claim the reward.

PATROLING THE NORTH SEA. (Par! Man! Gazette)

The raid of German cruisers on the Northeast coast of England should bring home to those who think of the North Sea as a rather big lake some idea of its real magnitude. It is not easy to define its northern limits, but the most moderate estimate of its area places it at 140 000 square miles, while a recent care-140,000 square miles, while a recent careful calculation by a German statistician ful calculation by a German statistician given it 548,000 square kilometers. Which is equivalent to 231,528 square miles. But the ceaseless watch and ward of the British fleet now extends to Iceland, and altogether not less than 400,000 square miles of water have to be patroled by the scouts of the grand fleet. Big as the fleet is, it is not big enough to prevent a surprise raid at some point of the 700 miles of coast on our eastern seaboard.

To insure every square mile of the North Sea itself, from the Shetlands to the mouth of the Thames, being kept under observation, at least 600 scouting vessels would be needed, for under the most favorable atmospheric conditions barely favorable atmospheric conditions barely 300 square miles can be swept from the crow's nest of a cruiser; and the German fleet can select its own time and place for its heroic bombardments of undefended towns. And in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, where for a brief period German cruisers were at large, the water cruisers were at large, th area for their operations extended to 90,-000,000 square miles.

WE'RE LEARNING.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review) We are all beginning to revise our opinions of Russian civilization. Before, we saw but one side of it, and that the least saw but one side of it, and that the least lively; now we are getting some glimpse of the other and better. We are learning some other things, too, one of them being that the value of education depends on its quality. The Russian peasants are said to be steeped in ignorance; yet in their ignorance they show a higher quality of civilization than the shining products of the German universities, who are employing their learning for the itstification of murder and the glorification of brute force. The Russian peasants are described as kindly, industrious and profoundly religious. Are they not better off m their ignorance than the Germans in their Kulture?

CARLYLE ON WAR

When Men Kill Men Between Whom There Was No Quarrel. What, speaking in quite unorficial

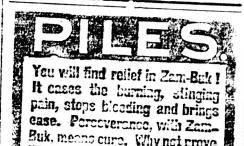

language, is the net purport and upshot of war? To my own knowledge, for example, there dwell and toll in the British village of Dumaredge usually some 500 souls. From these, by certain "natural enemies" of the French, there are successively selected during the French war, say thirty aplebodied men.Dumdredge, at her own expense, has suckied and nursed them. She has, not without difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood and even trained them to crafts, so that one can weave, another build, another hammer, and the weakest can stand under thirty stone avoirdupois.

Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing, they are selected, all dressed in red and shipped away at the public charge some 2,000 miles, or, say, only to the south of Spain, and fed there till wanted. And now to that same spot in the south of Spain are thirty similar French artisans from a French Dumdredge, in like manner wending, till at length, after infinite effort, the two parties come into actual juxtaposition, and thirty stands fronting thirty, each with a gun in its hand. Straightway the word "fire" given, and they blow the souls out of one another, and in place of some sixty brisk, useful craftsmen the world has sixty dead carcases which it must bury and anew shed tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the devil is, not the smallest! They lived far enough apart, were the entirest strangers; nay, in so wide a universe there was even, unconsciously, by commerce, some mutual helpfulness between them. How then? Simpleton! Their governors had fallen out, and instead of shooting one another had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot. Alas, so it is in Deutschland, and hitherto in all other lands. Still, as of old, "what deviltry so ever kings do the Greeks must pay the piper!" Thomas Car-

Her Dainty Speech.

There was one young woman in the box party at the theatre who took no part in the noisy blatter and giggle. With her gaze fixed upon the stage, she watched the progress of the play, indifferent to the gayety around her, except that her delicate, aristocratic, finely chiseled features bore a look of weariness and a scornful smile curved her lips. At last, however, she turned her head slowly and looked at the other members of the party. Then she spoke to the elderly matron sitting by her side. "That chicken in the blue kimono," she said, "thinks she is the whole custard!"-Argonaut.
