The Devil and Emperor Bill

The devil was sad, the devil was mad;
As mad as the devil could be.
The plain truth to tell there was not in hell
A soul just as angry as he.
He'd heard some bad news, he shook in his shoes,
As he contemplated his fate,
His chiefs gathered round, and on them he frowned,
And told them the tale of his hate.

"There's a fellow," said he, "who's a rival to me.
A chap they call Emperor Bill,
If everything's true, between me and you,
I'm certainly due for a spill.
He's king of them all, devils great, devils small,
Along side of him I'm a saint.
I know I am mad.—that thought makes me sad,
I'm not in his class—no I ain't.

When he reaches here, I'd very much fear,
To put him down there with the mob.
I know mighty well he'd Prussianize hell,
And I'd be out of a job."
And he cried like a kid, the devil he did,
And said I'm sure in a fix.
Be he wealthy or poor, hell would be hell sure.
When Charon rows him over the Styx

The devil he cried, the devil he sighed
As he thought of this rival of his,
He cried and he sighed till he pretty near died,
At the thought of losing his biz.
Mr., Mrs., or Miss the moral is this,
When you hear the Kaiser is dead,
Don't right then and there make a thanksgiving prayer.
Just pray for the devil instead.
