Lovest thou me not at all, Primrose mother?" and the wily Geoffrey, balked in his attempt at discovering the purport of his mother's journey, covered his defeat by an adroit movement to his reprover's side, and winding his arm about her, with endearing words, soothed her impatience and clacated her ire.

"Ah, thou hast thy father's way, love; thou art far more fitted for England's throne than the forked thing which sits thereon. Methinks Elinor must oft gird her teeth at night, contrasting her mandrake of a boy and thee, my bonny prince!"

Little doubt of it, sweetest madam. But my answer; what sayest thou, Lady Prioress; cannot these waxen fingers pluck a few pence from thine household's goodly purse for an unworthy wight?"

When Rosamund, in a mollified tone, asked: "An' what sum wisheth this naughty, peatering popinjay? This maid-seeking, pleasure-hunting votarie?" Geoffrey named a sum so large that it caused her to start from his encircling arms.

'What! What! Why, 'tis full half of all the income of our revenues, wretched boy! By my Christendom, thou ravest!'

I but borrowed his jeweled beit pendant that I might raise money thereon from Benedict, the Jew, knowing full well that thou, dear, patient mother, wouldst reimburse the heathen dog, and then I'll put the bauble back. John's away in the north, and will not miss it until he returns, some two or three weeks hence."

"Miserable wretch!" murmured Rosamund, beating her breast. "A thief, a thief, my son a thief."

"Well, what was my mother?" retorted Geoffrey brutally. "God's eyes, am I to have the chink or not?"

The wretched mother did not resent his insult, but continued to smite her breast, saying, "Peccavimi! I do but deserve it. That which we sow in corruption shall we reap in corruption! Aye, aye, I'll find a way to raise the sum," she responded. "I'll raise thee the sum, my son, never fear."

Geoffrey's face cleared. It was as if some hand had wiped an ugly picture from a tablet, and limned a fair one in its stead. His debonair smile came of the Priory as they (in fulfillment ed gaily:

How Plants Breathe. Plants have two experiences common to all living things, atthough they spire. The leaves and stems of plants of animals, and it is by this means the plants take in the air. Plants are chiefly water absorbed from the earth. Of the 25 per cent, solid matter the principal constituent is carbon, nearly all of which is absorbed from the atmosphere by the action of minute bodies contained in the green leaves. Plants also absorbe oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen from the atmosphere through their leaves and also through their roots. All contribute to building up the organic structure of the plant. Used up moisture is given off by plants through their leaves, just as animais perspire through the pores of their skins. Calculations made as to the amount of water thus perspired by piants show that the sunflower, only three and one-half feet high, gives off as much moisture as a man.
