

Your Food Furnishes or Disagrees Just Read This!

Thousands of broken-down, despondent dyspeptics have recently been given back their health. A month ago these despairing folks would have scorned the suggestion that anything could help them. Their terrible condition was chronic, and appeared beyond the reach of medicine.

These happy people don't proclaim it was a miracle that endowed them with a new lease of life—it was simply their common sense in selecting a tried and proven medicine, one specially adapted to their particular ailment.

All these splendid cures were effected by Dr. Hamilton's Pills which beyond all question have a strange power to restore a weak or ailing stomach.

If your stomach is tired and overworked try Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and note the prompt improvement. Pain before or after eating will disappear. You'll no longer have that nauseous, gassy, bad tasting sensation. You'll get a real vigorous appetite and digested food is bound to increase your strength, to make you brighter and more ambitious. In a week you'll feel like a different person, in a month you'll be permanently restored.

For those who are out of sorts, not feeling just to the scratch, perhaps bothered with headaches or constipation, try them. Dr. Hamilton's Pills will prove a boon.

"According to Hoyle"

The first author of books dealing with card games was Edmund Hoyle, who died in London, aged ninety-seven, in 1770. His treatise on whist, piquet and other games are still authorities, and "According to Hoyle" has become a proverb. Hoyle has been called the inventor of whist, which is an error, although he was the first to popularize the game and place it on a scientific and exact footing. Hoyle was a lawyer by profession, but he derived a good income from his books. For his treatise on whist he received $5,000, and the work was so popular that it ran through five editions in the first year, besides many pirated editions. Hoyle gave instructions on whist to parties of ladies and gentlemen, charging each $3 per lesson. For some years he held an official court in Ireland, which paid him $3,000 per year. Hoyle's book on whist was first published in 1742.

The World's Languages Now and What May Be in the Future.

How many men, if asked how many languages there are in the world, could give anything like an accurate answer? The average man's knowledge of ability to speak languages rarely exceeds two besides his native tongue. It may appear strange, but it is nevertheless true, that there are over 4,000 languages spoken by mankind, while the number of dialects exceeds this. There are more than sixty vocabularies in Brazil, and in Mexico the Nahuatl is broken up into some 700 dialects. There are hundreds in Borneo, and in Australia there is no classifying the complexities. Let us assume that fifty dialects, on an average, belong to each of 200,000 linguistic abilities.

A century hence the probability is that there will only be four languages of importance in the world. Central Europe may produce a newer and more straightforward German language. Imperial English may reign alone over the North American continent, while a more business-like Spanish will be used in South America. Then Russia may take up some more rich Slavonic dialect, which will blend the races of Eastern Europe and Central Asia into a harmonious federation. So that in future these four languages will enter into what may be a never-ending competition.—Exchange.

A Troublesome Cargo.

"An elephant's shoulder is never still" is a Hindu saying with reference to the restlessness of the animal. An Englishman tells how the elephant's passion for moving about once came near wrecking a ship.

A number of elephants were taken on board a vessel at Calcutta, and the steamer went down the Hoogli river. At night it anchored off Sango point. The sea was as still as oil, but the danger was so much that she was in danger of going over. The elephants had found that by swaying to and fro all together they could produce a pleasant rocking motion. As the ship had no other cargo and rode light the captain was much frightened. The mahouts, or keepers, were hurried down into the hold, and each one, seated on his own beast, made him "break step," but they had to stay there for a long time.

The Meteoric Hypothesis.

The nebular hypothesis of La Place has been abandoned in favor of the meteoric hypothesis of Chamberlain and planetary hypothesis of Lockyer. All stars, planets and moons, by these two nearly identical theories, were made by the falling in from space of small cosmic bodies, such as the meteors now falling on the earth.

Trillions of year ago there was a meteor moving in space. It is now in the centre of the earth. Another meteor joined this by collision, then another, and this falling in is now going on at a vastly diminished rate, so that comparatively few are now coming in, as may be seen on almost any clear night.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

A Land Without Flies.

It should be refreshing and a bit encouraging to the fatigued, hopeless fly-fighter to know that there is in the world a country in which there are no flies. The place is the British West Indies. This interesting fact—that there are no flies in British West Indies—starts up a number of questions and curious conjectures. Why is it that they have no flies? Is it that they have lost the seed, or is it that they have some active parasite or animal that feeds on flies, like the South American ant-eater, for instance? Certainly it is not that they have no flies. They have heat and moisture, and if there is any truth in the rumors, the flies that are necessary. The three conditions can exist without any flies in what we do not understand.—North Carolina Health Board Report.

THE NEW BRITAIN

The war, which is transforming everything, has transformed England. Our politicians do not seem to know it, but we are to-day, we never shall be again, the same people with the same conditions and the same days of looking at things that we were a year ago.

At the first touch of war the antagonisms of party shrivelled up. They are remembered now only as an intricate, as never before in her history, wiped clean at a stroke of all the barbed iron and contentions of the past. In the House of Commons, throughout the country, where passion wrought up to little, if at all, below boiling point, the concord was absolute and unbroken.

A generation hence we may again have parties in Britain. Meanwhile we are heading straight, if not for a Committee of Public Safety with all but absolute powers.

This, then, is one of the first results of the war for Great Britain. The country has found out, is disenchanting with, and utterly revolts from the politicians and their party game. It will not return to the old moorings. Very radical changes in the forms and methods and machinery of our public life.

But the political unity of the nation, induced by the outbreak of the war, and confirmed by all that has happened since, found a far more momentous counterpart in a social unity. One of the compensations of war is its virtue as a purgative of self. It has visibly classes closer together and evoked a spirit of genuine fraternity. Rich and poor beneath the compulsion of that common affliction have realized that they are all alike Britons and bound as one to stand together and help one another and the nation through the storm.

We are not a social democracy before the war. We are well on the way towards becoming one now. We shall be one before the long-distant peace is concluded. Already some three million of our best men, drawn from every occupation and every rank in life, have mingled with one another, have learned to understand and sympathize with one another, in the new armies. At least three millions may yet have to be added to them. And this great nonsense of social distinctions knocked out of them, trained into an equal brotherhood in the severest school of courage and efficiency, is the backbone of Britain during the war, and will continue to be its backbone through the not less anxious decades of peace.

The war has fused as nothing else could have fused us into one people. Of what account is "the guinea stamp"?

But Mr. Pritchard Didn't Get the Job for Which He Applied.

There is a certain middle aged and old-fashioned business man who is a little doubtful whether he or the other carried off the honors of war in an interview given to a smart young man.

"The smart young man was applying for a berth."

"Let me see," said the merchant; "you've called on me before, but not on your present errand. The first time you represented Up to Date Limited and offered to put our concern on modern lines. Then you came on behalf of Systems & Files and said you were business doctors. And after that you came as the publicity expert of the Newest in Advertising Company."

"That is so, sir."

"And are all these—companies dead?"

"The young man reluctantly admitted that they were."

"Yet after coming here three times to offer to teach us our business when your concerns go down you coolly solicit a berth in this poor, effete old firm. Why, what use are you to us? Look at your record."

"You never know, sir. I might be very useful. Look what a splendid experience I've had in winding up companies."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Glad Hand.

We are not isolated units in this universe of ours. We are all of us members of a great world community. All of us are so constituted that our welfare and our happiness depend on the maintenance of good will with others.

To a great extent, however, we always have it in our power to deter towards us shall be.

We have this power by virtue of the fact that the human mind tends to be swayed in its critical judgments by the character of the emotional moods experienced. People usually think exactly as they feel.

Hence the value of the glad hand. The cordial greeting, the cheery smile, the display of genuine interest—all these help to create pleasurable moods in other persons, and consequently prepossess them in our favor.

Whereas the cold, indifferent approach, the flabby handshake and the languid air arouse feelings of antagonism, if not of suspicion and aversion.

He Ate His Own Words.

Not long ago the punishment for libel in Russia was the requirement that the libeler literally eat his own words. A man who published a small volume reflecting on the unlimited power of the sovereign was seized, tried in a summary way and condemned to consume the objectionable words. In one of the public streets the book was severed from its binding, the margins cut off, the book rolled up one by one and fed to the unfortunate author. A surgeon was in attendance to pronounce upon the possibility of giving without endangering his life, but he is reported to have set the limit at something like 200.

FOR OTHERS TO EVULATE

The directors of the Imperial Oil Company, Limited, have decided to pay all employees who have enlisted, or who may enlist, with the Canadian Contingent for overseas service—in the case of married men—half pay, and in the case of single men—quarter pay until the end of the war, and in addition, will hold the positions open.

Should any employee who is serving with the colors meet with a fatality in the course of the war, the directors will continue the payment—in the case of married men—half pay for six months after his death and in the case of single men—quarter pay for six months after his death.

The above applies to all regular members of the staff who were in the service of the company for at least six months immediately preceding the Declaration of War.

The Epiglottis.

A modern engine is dependent on a large extent upon automatically working valves for its efficiency, but the perfected valve was invented by nature and applied to the human body long before mankind began to dream of steam or gas engines. We dignify this valve by the name of epiglottis, and most of us know something about it. It is situated at the back of the mouth just where the air passage and food passage cross. It is the function of the epiglottis to close the windpipe automatically every time we swallow food. If it did not every particle of food would choke us. This valve works with more automatic precision than any ever placed on an engine.

THE GREATEST RAILROAD.

Africa's Famous Cape to Cairo Line Will be Unique.

When all the great railroad trunks of the world have been built, a decade or two hence, four of them will appear upon the map in heavy black, indicating that they surpass all others in importance. These will be the Pan-American, from the Arctic wastes of Transiberian, from the Atlantic to the Pacific across northern Europe and Asia, the Transpersian or some other line, from the southeast of Europe to India, and the Cape to Cairo.

The Pan-American and the Indo-European railways may surpass the Cape to Cairo as commercial arteries, and more potentially as a strategic line, but for the sheer interest of the country traversed—for the picturesque variety and romantic appeal of the panoramas running like double panoramas past the car window—the magnificent African trunk can never know a rival.

Six thousand miles across 65 degrees of latitude; a score of climates, and the lands of a hundred different peoples or tribes; the second longest of the world's rivers and two of its largest lakes; the greatest dam ever built, conserving water for the world's ancient of all temples; the greatest waterfall, and the most imposing gold and diamond mines, and finally one of the last great expanses of real wilderness, the only place in the world where the wild beasts of the jungle may be seen in their primitive state from a train—all these days! Surely way can never be another such railway as this.—Lewis R. Freeman in World's Work.

It is a grand thing for the English language that there is no word for "ennui." If the creature had been drab-colored, if there had been no horses, dogs, water rats, or dragon intestines, if religion had been clear, if all men's conditions had been equal; if men and women were always amenable to reason, and were might have been somewhat dull; there would have been a justifiable word for ennui in all languages.
