nose and hair. These poke-shape bonnet effects are, by the way, the very latest note. They suggest rather than follow the lines of the old-fashioned poke bonnet and are interesting as showing the general tendency in modes, both in hats and gowns, to jump back to the early part of the last century. This twentieth century her great start at the beginning of the round wide brimmed hat with low top crown. There are no strings and the when "Opportunity" comes to you the wire form slightly at the sides. Other shapes which figure conspicuously and show the general trend of the style are the bowler forms and the modifications of the Louis Philippi man's top hat. In trimmings it si to be noted that small hats promise to be lavishly laden with plumes, ribbons and bows, while the larger hats are to be very scantily adorned. Ostrich feathers promise to be largely used both in plain and fantasy forms. The particolored feathers of this season, in contrast to those in use some five years ago, are composed of separate feathers, dyed separately and then sewed together. In the fantasy ostrich motifs are to be had bow knots, bands formed of the flues of the ostrich feather arranged in parallel lines, pompons of Ostrich with centres compos-
