(1) Trail to Yoho Valley. (2) C.P.R. Station and Hotel at Glacier. (3) The Trail to the Illcillewaet Glacier. (4) A Mountain Trail.

CANADA is a land of trails. Trails over mountains and hills, across prairies and through forests, by the banks of rivers beyond number and across country toward a distant sky line. Trails made by red men, by white men, and by nature.

But the mountain trails are the most alluring of them all, and hitting trails is the rarest of sport in Rockies or Selkirks, all the way from the Kamassakasis Pass on the east to the Yoho gateway on the west.

The trail traveller feels the charm of the trail as soon as it is hit. It keeps you guessing where it is a hifalutin highway, where you require the assistance of an Indian to tell the way by the slightest of signs—a few twigs broken here, the mould of a horse's foot there, a blasted tree you see and guess there will be a slip of a few yards that will throw you off the scent if you don't look out. Sometimes the trail is the way of a mountain stream, but just where you should emerge on the other side is a mystery unless you are in charge of a guide or outfit. A bog, too, will play tricks on you, for it carries few traces of other trappers.

Hundreds of miles of excellent trails have been made in the Canadian mountain ranges by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the National Parks department of the Canadian Government. Most of them are made for pony use, and mounted on one of these sure-footed little beasts of the west, you can be an explorer of the wilds and revel in the experience. Every mile of the devious way is a way of varying charm, every turn of the trail reveals new wonders.

Now trail trips are now made in loops. There is the one from Glacier station up the Cougar Valley to the caves and back by a loop route and over a pass that brings to view some of the sublimest scenery in the Selkirks. The literal ups and downs of this unique scenic route, as the rail-ways would say, add to the interest, now in the bed of the valley, tiased in by trees and huge plants like the Devil's Club, now climbing a thousand feet from which superb views are had of the kingly peaks like Sir Donald.

The trail traveller will find another region of infinite variety and attractiveness in the series of trails radiating from Field and leading up the Yoho Valley to the Yoho Glacier field at its upper end. One may go northward by the valley route, passing the Takshaw, the Twin and the Laughing Falls, and return by the river trail, bordering a charming lake or two, the nose of the Vice-President glacier, Summit Lake and then the steep down-hill bit to Emerald Lake and the tree-bordered avenue that will bring one back to Field. Shelter huts or tents make it possible to spend some days on this marvellous trail way, amid alpine region of surpassing beauty.

Lake Louise will also provide delectable trail paths, especially that leading to Paradise Valley and its circle of giant summits, and Sentinel Pass, leading to the valley of the Ten Peaks, while in the Rocky Mountain Park and Banff, the routes are multiplying year by year.

Yes, trail hitting is rare sport, I repeat, and no country in the world affords greater facilities for its enjoyment than our own Canadian mountains.
