Seed Treatment for Grain Smut

Stinking Smut of Wheat, Oat Smuts, Covered Smut of Barley.

LOST $12,000,000

Every year by the grain grower... of many tons, Saskatchewan and Alberta from smut diseases affecting their grain? How much smut do you notice in your grain? How much is your share of this loss? Don't lose your share—treat your grain before sowing. If there was smut this year, there will be more in the next—prevent smut treatment. This will explain how to do it.

Formalin solution—1 lb. of formalin (or normal strength) to 100 gallons of water. Mix well before using.

Steeping method—Fill bags with full of grain. Dip bags into solution, then move several times up and down to drive the air out and keep well immersed in solution not less than 10 minutes and not more than 30 minutes. Take out bags, drain and spread out to dry. The solution does not become exhausted in strength; if re-used in quantity by use and fresh solution. Smut balls should be removed in the fanning mill.

Sprinkling method—Solution of the same strength may be used. Forty gallons suffices to treat 10-20 bushels of grain. Heap grain on clean floor, sprinkle solution over it with a boom or sprinkling can. Mix well by shovelling over. Pile the grain and cover with clean bags. After three hours spread out to dry. For large quantities treat in a grain wagon, mix well and leave covered over night.

Most grain cannot be dried so freely as dry grain; for this reason adjust the drill carefully to allow free flow of the sand will be to thin.

Drying before treating—Never expose wet grain to temperatures below freezing point (32 deg. F.). On sunny days spread out in the open to dry if the weather is unsuitable spread grain out on clean floor. Dry as quickly as possible, if left wet too long it will sprout.

Avoid re-infection—If not careful the spores of the fungus will re-infect the grain after treatment. As long as the grain is wet there is no danger, but once dry the risk is greater. Use new bags for re-bagging, or dip old bags in a ether solution used, dry them, and they may be used again.

Corn smut is not controlled by seed treatment. Remove and burn infected plants or parts as soon as not needed. For further information apply to Dept. of Agriculture, Cayuga, Ont.
