There is also a claim, according to Hone, that the problem was solved by a discovery of Hippocrates, the geometrician of Chios-not the physician-500 B. C. Now, the efforts of Hippocrates were devoted toward converting a circle into a crescent, because he had found that the area of a figure produced by drawing two perpendicular radiuses in a circle is exactly equal to the triangle formed by the line of junction. This is the famous theorem of the "lunes of Hippocrates" and is, like glauber salt out of the philosopher's stone, an example of the useful results which sometimes follow a search for the unattainable.

GETTING AN EDUCATION.

After the Age of Thirty is the Time to Start in Earnest.

According to the Saturday Evening Post, the best time to get an education -perhaps the only time-is any time after one has passed thirty. The stuff that one learns before twenty is not meant to be remembered. It is only a placing of the chutes and an arrangement of the bins for the permanent contents, From twenty to thirty one is all torn up with courting, marrying and getting a foothold in life. After that is the time for education-from then on until death or senile debility. A man or woman past thirty is exactly at the most favorable period for mastering knowledge, training the mind, forming the taste. Some systematic effort is all that is necessary. Notice the silly and tiresome ways in which enormous numbers of people spend some of their holidays. They know what to do with their working hours, but not with their leisure.

Most of them by a little direction and a little systematic effort might develop some special interest. Boys quickly tire of mere aimless and painless play. Naturally they want a method and a goal in it. Having a goal is exactly what gives zest to the

Best Liniment of All Destroys Every Pain But Never Burns

"How thankful we are to get hold of such a wonderful household remedy as Nerviline," writes Mrs. E. P. Lamontagne from her home near Wetaskawin, Alberta. "In this far-away section, far away from a doctor or bulbs in thousands among the treesdruggist, every family needs a good supply of liniment. Nerviline is the best of all. 'It destroys every pain, but never burns. We use Nerviline in a score of ways. If it's rheumatism, aching back, pain in the side, sciatica or stiff neck,-you can laugh at them if you have lots of Nerviline handy. For earache, toothache or cramps I don't think anything could act more quickly For a general allround pain remedy I can think of nothing more valuable and speedy to cuer than Nerviline."

The above letter is convincing-it teils how reliable and trusty this oldtime remedy is. There could be no more appropriate and legitimate association of industries than are to be found in the various phases of cabinet-making and pottery-making, for the very good reasons that they have the same periods of inception and have in every stage of development been regulated and advanced by the same motives of form, design and purpose, and thus may truthfully be classed as sister arts, each being in a measure necessary to the other's progress. While this was easily perceivable in the products sent west from Oriental countries, prior to mid eighteenth century times, it was very apparent when, after the discovery of china clay and china stone in Cornwall by William Cookworthy, (about 1745), the manufacture of fine porcelain was established as a British industry, and Bow and Chelsea, Worcester and Derby, Plymouth and Bristol all became engaged, and operated to full capacity, in the production of the objects of art and usefulness destined to be housed, protected and preserved, in and upon the cabinets, and sideboards designed and produced for their accommodation by contemporary pioneer cabinet-making in the persons of Thomas Chippendale, Thomas Sheraton and Hepplewhite.

The kinship existing between the two industries receives confirmation when their constructive principles, purpose and features of decoration are looked into. The half-dozen porcelain establishments named, all took their earliest inspiration for decorative motifs from the then popular products men to recognize in them the characteristics of ornamentation employed in the sister art of wood-carving at the same period. The same similarity in conception and treatment is apparent in the French products, of the same period, in these industries; also in the classical models and embellishments of the cabinets designed by the brothers Adam and the Jasper and Basalt wares of Josiah Wedgwood.

The biggest of fresh water fishes, the "arapaima" of the Amazon, in South America, which grows to six feet in length, has teeth on its tongue, so that the latter resembles the file, and is used as such. Some kinds of trout also have the same peculiarity. Fighes that swallow their prey entire have their teeth so supported on flexible bases as to bend backward, but not forward, in order that their vic-

NUNOBIKI WATERFALLS.

Bewitching Night Scene at a Popular Japanese Resort.

A sight in the summer life of Japan not easily forgotten is procured in a night visit to the Nunobiki waterfall, just outside Kobe, on the northeast. There are two falls, the lower or female fall of forty-three feet and the upper or male fall of eighty feet, the water gushing in each case out of the hill above and falling down the gorge to a whiring pool below. It is reached by an easy, winding climb up the cliffs of the "Million Fireflies"-tiny electric and the thousands and thousands of gayly-clad women and children visitors shepherded by the more sombre clad men give the traveller two distinctly delightful sensations before reaching he illuminated falls themselves.

The tiny lights come and go among the trees in a bewitching way. ### GAME IN SUMMER.

Hawks, Horned Owl and Crow Tax Skill of Hunter.

Upland birds that can be shot during the summer months are good game for the hunter. There are the various hawks, like the Cooper or hen-destroying variety, that feeds on the young grouse, as well as the farmer's unguarded flock of early broilers, which he picks off one by one, despite the outcries of the mother and the valiena screams of the chanticleer fa-

The great horned owl also levies a heavy tribute upon roosting birds, often coming to the open poultry houses, where it will ruthlessly destroy several fowls by eating their Minard's Liniment Co., Ltd.: heads and leaving the bodies piled up under the roost. This is also the way that the raccoon serves the half-grown turkeys roosting on the hay rack in the big barn about harvest time.

It will tax the rifle skill of any man worked out on paper beforehand. dead tree 100 yards or so distant. A good way for the visitor and his farmer guide to aproach a bunch of these black imps at work pulling up and devouring the young kernels of the latter's recently planted corn (maize), is to crawl on hands and kness through a thick copse of undergrowth and open up the battery from the leafy mask. Of course, if the hunters have only shotguns, they must worm their way farther in, until the proper range is reached.

The Indians used to capture a young erow, tie a long fishing line to one leg and cast the youngster into the open place where the parent and other crows could see it. Then they would pull the leg of the crowlet and make it cry. This would at once bring the whole flock of its elders to its assistance, for crows are very sympathetic and are banded together for self-defense, like most robbers and thieves. Any one of the foregoing kinds of hunting may be practiced freely by any visitor to an upland farmhouse.

What Makes Mirrors Reflect?

Mirrors that are made of glass have metal placed on one side of the glass. The light will pass through the glass, but will not pass through the metal backing. Light has the property of bounding from a surface that it cannot penetrate, the same as a ball would when thrown against a surface that it cannot penetrate. The light passes through the glass of the mirror, meets the metal backing and then bounds from it. This bounding of the light from the metal surface is called reflection, and mirrors are said to reflect.
