

An Enthusiast on Canada

ONE might almost think that three million miles of travel would satisfy any man, but Mr. Burton Holmes, the famous American globe trotter, wanted more and spent three months this summer in crossing Canada from coast to coast as the first stage of his fourth million. The country was new to him, but it provided him with such a wonderful variety of beautiful pictures that he now declares he never spent three more interesting months in his life. He is lecturing now to audiences of two and three thousand at a time in the great cities of the United States, urging them to spend next summer either in the romantic, historic centres of Eastern Canada or the mountain fastnesses of the Canadian Pacific Rockies. His moving pictures of Banff, Lake Louise and the Yoho Valley are the finest of their kind ever produced, while the photographs in natural colors taken by Mrs. Burton Holmes are a revelation as to the possibilities of this new process of picture taking. Canada has probably never been drawn to the attention of our American neighbors in a more attractive fashion.

ROLL OF HONOR

Several thousand officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company enlisted for active military duty with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the majority of them are now in Europe, bravely battling for Canada and the Empire. As particulars of Army Reservists are not available, these lists of those who have given up their lives for their country or been wounded in action are necessarily incomplete, and do not therefore indicate fully the extent to which the Company's officers and employees have participated in the great struggle.

WESTERN FOSSIL MINES

GRAVEYARDS OF PREHISTORIC ANIMALS YIELD TREASURES

Red Deer Valley in Alberta is Fabulously Well Off in Remains of Paleozoic Monsters Whose Skeletons Are in so Great Demand in Museums the World Over—How the Find Was Made.

THERE are some parts of the world—South Dakota, for instance—where a large income is derived from the mining for the fossil bones of animals that lived before Noah's flood.

According to Mr. Barnum Brown of the American Museum of Natural History, there are localities in Alberta where the soil actually yields successive crops of these interesting and valuable bones.

Mr. Brown, who is fairly well known to many westerners, says that he first heard of the old animal graveyards while at his work in New York.

A visitor to the museum, while examining the large fossil specimens in the reptile hall, remarked that he had seen many similar bones near his ranch in the Red Deer Canon of Alberta," he says. "After talking with him for some time he extended an invitation to me to visit his home and prospect the canon. Accordingly, preliminary trip was shortly after made to that locality.

From Didsbury, a little town north of Calgary, we were driven eastward ninety miles through a portion of the newly opened grain belt of Alberta. Near the railroad the land is mostly under cultivation and comfortable homes testify to the rich nature of the soil.

A few miles eastward the brush land gives way to a level expanse of grass-covered prairie dotted here and there by large and small lakes probably of glacial origin. Mile after mile of the road follows section line, and one is rarely out of sight of the house of some 'homesteader.'

"It is through this level farm land that the Red Deer River winds its way flowing through a canon far below the surface. The canon was produced and so many bones found that it appeared most desirable to extend the search along the river.

"Usually fossils are found in 'beds,' where extensive areas are eroded into hills and ravines. A camp site is located near some spring or stream, and the collectors ride or walk over miles of expanse in each direction till the region is thoroughly explored.

"Quite different conditions are found on the Red Deer. Here, cutting through the prairie land, the river has formed a canon two to five hundred feet deep, and rarely more than a mile wide at the top. In places the walls are nearly perpendicular, and the river winds in its narrow valley, touching one side, then crossing to the other, so that it is impossible to follow its course for any great distance, even on horseback.

"The conditions appeared so favorable to the fossil-hunter that a camp was established and a flat boat, built on lines similar to a Western ferry-boat, twelve by thirty feet in dimension, and having a carrying capacity of eight tons, was constructed.

"Satisfied with a season's provisions, lumber for boxes, and planter for encasing bones, we began our fossil cruise down a canon which was at one time in the fur territory of the great Hudson Bay Company.

"No more interesting or instructive journey could be taken. High up on a plateau buildings and haystacks proclaimed a well-settled country, but habitations were rarely seen from the river, and for miles traveled through picturesque solitude, unbroken save by the roar of the rapids.

Especially characteristic of this canon are the slides, where the current, setting against the bank, has undermined it until a mountain of earth slips into the river, in some cases almost choking its course. In some of these slides we found several small mammal jaws and teeth not known before. From Canada, associated with fossil glacial shells of the Eocene age, a geological period estimated to have begun about 2,000,000 years ago.

"Along the upper part of the stream fossil shells and mammal jaws were obtained, but near the town of Content, where the river bends upward, a new series of rocks appeared, and in these our search was rewarded by finding dinosaur bones. Specimens were found in increasing numbers as we continued our journey, and progress down the river was necessarily much slower. Frequently the boat would be tied up a week or more at one camp while we searched the banks, examining the cliffs layer by layer, that no fossil might escape observation.

"As soon as a mile or more had been prospected or a new specimen obtained, the boat was dropped down to a new convenient anchorage. Box after box was added to the collection, till scarcely a cubic space remained unoccupied on board our fossil ark.

"On account of the heavy rainfall and frequent sliding of banks, new fossils are exposed every season, so that in a few years these same banks can again be explored profitably. Where the temperature is not infrequently (here!) 40 to 60 degrees below zero in winter, it is difficult to think of a time when a warm climate could have prevailed, yet such condition is indicated by the fossil plants.

"As a result of the Canadian work, the Museum is enriched by a magnificent collection of Cretaceous fossils more than 3,000,000 years old, some of which are new to science."
