that he feared she was given to picking and stealing, or some other sin. "Romance, my dear child, is all very well in—ahem—novels, but in real life the less you have to do with romance the better.

"I think you are out of your mind," says Aunt Podswell, solemnly. "Perhaps I am," says Signa, wearing a look of indifference.

"I don't think you ought to listen to what goes on downstairs," says Signa, drawing herself to her full height.

"Thank you, my dear," says the rector, suavely. "That is all we want. Rest assured that your aunt and I only desire your good, and that all our exertions are for your future welfare."

"I am very sorry that he does not," says Signa, ruefully, and she makes her escape.

Advice to Dyspeptics Well Worth Following

In the case of dyspepsia, the appetite is variable. Sometimes it is ravenous, again it is often very poor.

don't think you ought to listen to what goes on downstairs," says Signa, drawing herself to her full height.

"I don't care!" he says, emphatically. "It's true. It is like his cheek! Why, you would have to go and live with him at the Park, and that's miles away, right across the river.

"I believe you are asleep and dreaming, Archie, or you wouldn't talk such nonsense," says Signa, and she kisses him in the manner esteemed so much by a child—"good-night, and—"
