Honor for Haldimand

To the County of Haldimand, through its representative, Dr. Jaques, was accorded this year the honor of moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne at the opening of the Legislature. Under the British parliamentary system this is the method employed to ascertain whether the party in power has a majority in the House, and it is therefore necessary to review in some measure the work of the past year, and to forecast so far as it is possible from the speech itself what the Government proposes to warrant the House voting further confidence.

In selecting Dr. Jaques this year the Government made a happy choice. To one who has heard the opening debate for many sessions it was a welcome relief from the stereotyped eulogy of a partisan performance. Dr. Jaques, beyond paying the usual compliments which the occasion demanded in opening, plunged right into a wide discussion of affairs, presenting in the first place, a brief retrospect of the history of the Belgian people, and the position in which they were placed by history and tradition at the outbreak of the war. He reviewed the accomplishments of the British Empire in the various theatres of war and then directed attention to what has been done in the first place by Canada and in the second place by the Province of Ontario.

"A perfectly peaceful nation living happily as one of the family of nations in the British Empire, was suddenly called upon to furnish men to defend her liberties. It has been estimated that if a really major war was being waged by the motherland, that Canada might send thirty or thirty-five thousand men. Already 434,000 Canadians have offered themselves, and 310,000 have gone overseas," said the member for Haldimand.

Canada has given quality as well as quantity, he went on. This has been proven time and time again in serious actions on the west front. On three different occasions the Canadian troops have stood in the breach against the hordes of the German. And added to this was the participation of the people in various patriotic objects, which as far as was ascertainable, amounted to nearly $15,000,000, and no doubt the total was considerably in excess of that.

Turning his attention to the temperance measure passed last session, Dr. Jaques declared it to be the "most outstanding act of the present administration." There was a fourfold waste at the liquor traffic, namely the waste of material, waste of time by those engaged in its manufacture, waste of time and efficiency by those who used it and waste of money. "He paid a tribute to Sir William Hearst, Prime Minister, in these words: 'If Ontario can not do her part to win this war and drink whiskey, then we will quit drinking whiskey or I will step out of my position as Prime Minister.'" By that offer of sacrifice the Premier was assuredly doing his bit, (applause).

Discussing the economic aspect of present day conditions, Dr. Jaques pointed with pride to the splendid administration that had been given to the provincial finances. He complimented the Provincial Treasurer, Hon. T. W. McGarry, on the success that had attended his loans in New York—floated at a time when the money market was panicky, and when even the Dominion of Canada was obliged to pay a high rate of interest for money.

"But it is not in the narrow sense of governmental finances that I wish to speak, but in a broader sense of the use that is being made of money by private individuals. Are we bracing ourselves for a long, hard struggle (if there should be one ahead of us) or are we going on in a happy-go-lucky fashion, enjoying the prosperity which is brought about by a large war expenditure, using the money borrowed in the first place by the treasuries of the Dominion or the Province and paid out for munitions and other war material, to buy useless luxuries? I fear in many cases this is true? (hear, hear.) Can we not at least get along without luxuries, the making of which come into direct competition with the making of army so necessary for our boys?"

Following the statement that we are not limited in our loyalty, in the heroic quality of our sons, in our generosity or in our natural resources, Dr. Jaques thought we were limited in the number of native born Canadians who should be doing active service in the Province. He repeated a statement by Sir Lee Money that the war would undoubtedly give a new valuation of life and that within fifteen years we will have saved more lives than will have been lost in the war. This seemed almost more than could be hoped for, but he predicted that after the war the world was going to think and work fast. The day was coming when the "good fellow" would be the one who worked most, no matter what that work might be.

Proceeding Dr. Jaques paid a compliment to the men from Canada who had gone to the front. "They saw their duty to the country and to us. They nobly responded to the call of duty. Now let us do our duty to them. We can't repay them in one year, we can't repay them in five years. But if we are loyal, if we are if there is any sense of gratitude in us, if it takes twenty years we must do our duty to them." (applause.)

It was easy enough to say to the returned soldiers that he could go on the land and become a farmer. But it was an affront to these men to limit our loyalty to a chance to go to Northern Ontario and become a pioneer when the lacker who stayed at home had graduated in his profession and was pursuing a chosen profession in the city.

"I would like to see," he said, "a returned soldier asked, 'what calling has you proposed to follow when you enlisted.' If he should say 'I had made up my mind to be a doctor' (or follow any other calling), and if he were still of the same mind, it should be said to him 'go over to the University, get enrolled and the fees will be arranged for you.' Let him take his course in full. It is a poor recompense to shorten his term because not only turns him out less fitted for his life's work." (applause.)

In conclusion Dr. Jaques complimented the Government on the efforts that had been put forward to meet the trying situations that had developed during the past year. While men had been going to the front care had been taken to maintain conditions at home as stable as possible, and he was glad that a proposal had been made to induce citizens from United States to come over and help us, speaking as the representative of an agricultural constituency he felt sure that the policy of the Government was worthy of every commendation. The war he summed up in three phrases: the lash, the grip, the drag. The lash on Paris and the channel ports had failed; the grip had prevented the Germans getting through at Verdun; the drag was now on, and he who could hold on the longest would win. These were indications that the Kaiser was beginning to squirm. "The British bull dog is just setting his teeth firmly fixed in the Kaiser's throat for a fine old 'just-as-long-as-you-like' tussel." (applause.)

Reception Given

On Saturday evening, Feb. 17th, a very pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Glasfield, when by special invitation about thirty five friends gathered to congratulate and welcome back home from their home front Mr. and Mrs. Herman Meill who were married on Feb. 7, 1917.

The home was tastefully decorated by ribbons of cream crepe paper while carnations adorned the table.

The guests were met at the door by Miss Ruth Glasfield of Brucefield whose graceful manner and pleasant smile immediately assured them of a pleasant evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Meill returned on the evening train and on arriving at the house were welcomed at the door by the family of the bride. Soon after the bride and groom entered the drawing room when the guests arose to further welcome them and extend greeting and congratulations. The bride looked very pretty, wearing in her wedding dress of shell-pink champagne silk.

The evening was pleasantly spent in games and music. Then after ample refreshment had been done the lunch all joined in singing "God be with you till we meet again." The guests then departed leaving the bride and groom but for Mr. and Mrs. Glasfield.

Among those present were noticed Messrs. Hagersville, Brucefield, Appleton, Garnet, Sanouk and Jarvis.

Death of Mrs. Robert Stone of Walpole

The death of Mrs. Robt. Stone, which occurred last Monday morning came as a great shock to her friends and neighbors as very few knew of illness. On Monday week she felt as if she was catching cold but nothing serious was thought until Saturday when a doctor was called and found she had a very severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia. On Sunday she gradually became worse and early Monday morning she passed away. The funeral took place from her late residence to-day to Nanticoke cemetery for interment.

She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and two daughters who have the sympathy of the whole community in their sudden bereavement.
