her ears, and she lays her head upon his breast, and presses her lips to the senseless coat. Then she laughs—a low, rippling laugh of excessive happiness—like the falling of water from a cup over-filled.

"What will Aunt Podswell say?" "He laughs in harmony; then he struggles his shoulders."

"Oh, do you not remember? You would not drink out of the same cup." "He laughs in harmony; then he struggles his shoulders."

"No, I dare not," he said, with a look of protest, and when at last he gave up, he said, "I think you made me, I think that my touch where yours had been, and all my strength was needed to keep me from clasping you in my arms, and—"

"Must we? Ah!" "Yes; even now you may catch your dress." "Let me brush the dew from my hair."

"Shall I tell you—shall I make a shameful confession?" she whispers, her face and neck a burning red. "He nods, holding her hand, his eyes drinking in the light down pouring from hers."

"Shall I? I feel as if I must! Well, then, when you kneel and wipe the wet from my dress the other day at St. Clare, I felt tempted—ah! fiercely tempted—to stoop and kiss you as I kiss you now. Ah, my love! my love!"

"Gracious Heaven!" "Bless my soul!" "Signa!" "What is the matter?" "Mr. Warren!"

"These and similar ejaculations, uttered in a sort of chorus by Mr. and Mrs. Podswell, greet the pair as they enter the Rectory drawing room; Hector Warren rather pale, and still bearing about him the evidences of his climb up the tower; Signa, dew-drenched and pale to the lips, but with a soft-gleaming light in her violet eyes."

"Signa takes off her hat and sinks softly into a chair, with her eyes bent on the ground, not ashamedly, but with a heavy, dreamy consciousness. "Well!" demands Mrs. Podswell, snappishly, "can't you speak? Are you aware of the time? Where is Lady Blite? Why have you left the Park? And what—what—does he mean as being in your company, she would like to add; but the dark eyes, fixed so calmly on her, are too much for her."

"Let me explain, if you will, Signa, coming to the table, and putting his hat down with the easy grace of self-possession which poor Sir Frederick so madly hates. "Miss Grenville has left the Park—" plates in restaurants should be required to be thoroughly washed each time they are used. Carriers, unfortunately cannot disinfect the mouths before eating, but everything used by them can be prevented from giving the infection to others by the most generous use of boiling water and soap.

Do not have pneumonia. Keep well rested up, well fed and refrain from dissipation of every kind. The little things neglected every day weaken the resistance to this disease. Stop when you are tired. Go to bed after a wearing day of hard work and give up the completed evening at the theatre, such a time is imperative. Do not stop and rest in middle life when tired, fretted or fatigued. Momentary strain on the nervous system and circulatory system, which deprives these systems of the power to combat the ravages of a disease which holds a person bedfast.

Before the European war 50 per cent of British East Africa's exports of chillies came to America, but high freight rates have decreased these exports to 15 per cent. Exports in 1916 were valued at $2,260, with Egypt as the best customer.

Baths Relieve Pain. Sufferers throughout the world are gaining relief from therapeutic experiences by the doctors in the hospitals of the war zone who are continually devising some means to reduce the pain of the wounded soldiers. At a large hospital it was found that the men who were suffering from severe wounds, serious and retarded recovery. At an experiment several were suspended in tubs through which water at a temperature of 100 degrees Fahrenheit was kept running. One man who had been in such pain from a lacerated thigh that it was feared he would go insane, was laid upon a rubber mattress in a bath. His pain entirely subsided, and more rapid progress in healing was made than in any similar wound upon record.

Nerviline Ends Neuralgia, Brings Relief Instantly. No Remedy Like Old "Nerviline" to Cure Pain or Soreness. That terrible ache—how you fairly reel with it—that stabbing, burning neuralgia—what misery it causes. Never mind, you don't have to suffer. Use Nerviline; it's a sure cure. Not an experiment, because nearly forty years of wonderful success has made a name for Nerviline among the people of many different nations. There is nothing speedier to end Neuralgia headache than old-time Nerviline. writes Mr. G. C. Dageleish, from Evanston. "It is so powerful and penetrating that it seems to eat up any pain in a minute. My family couldn't get along without Nerviline. We always keep a bottle handy on the shelf, and use it to end chest colds, sore throat, coughs, earache, toothache and pain in the back. My wife swears by Nerviline. For cramps its effect is astonishing, and we believe it is better and speedier than any other household family remedy." At all dealers.
