FROM MONSTER TO GOOD KING
Life of Lewanika, King of African Barotse.

A Monument to Work of One Good Man.

In the heart of the sombre African jungle there died recently one of the greatest and best of the kings of the unknown, though not undiscovered, world—a ruler of one of those spaces bright to your fancy, dim on the map, black in truth, a part of "heart of darkness." The dead king was called Lewanika, head chief of the Barotse, and he was autocrat of the lives and destinies of some millions of black men dwelling in the forbidding valley of the upper Zambesi. Excepting Abyssinia, his was the greatest native empire on the barbaric continent, and the man himself perhaps the last of those picturesque and terrible monarchs whose doings and undolings took on a frightful shadow from contrast with the encroaching light of the world outside.

Lewanika, dead at 55, saw his country emerge from the wildest, most savage of a place literally within the glow of civilization. Beginning life as a butcher, outlager, and wholesale assassin, he closed it as a constructive and beneficent old barbarian, in love with the brilliant and mysterious great lands across the seas.

In his lifetime he abolished savage punishments, brutal sacrifices and with quiet, conciliatory way, which had come to take nothing, and was decidedly anxious to make friends. Lewanika long repulsed this visitor, but eventually yielded, received him and permitted his entrance, honor and respect.

This man was Francis Collard, the famous Zambesi missionary. When he went to his first meeting with the king, that worthy squatted on the ground in complete nudity, and devoured ducks with his hands and teeth. Toward the end of his life the king had learned even an excellent taste in European foods, wines and table fittings.

Collard, by unshakable patience, got himself admitted to the confidence and trust of the king, who in time treated him with respect, honor and consulted him about the government of his tribe.

"What," he cried one day in the face of recurring trouble, "shall I do with my people?"

Collard's reply is preserved in his diary, left on his death at Lewanika's court in 1904:

"Take the secret spear from under your cloak and throw it away; renounce vengeance once for all, attack your people to yourself by making their welfare your first object; put a stop to theft; give them justice, quiet sleep, and good food to eat."

In 1902 Lewanika, attired in good European clothes and invariably equipped with a silk hat, attended the coronation of King Edward—Barotse having before that time become a voluntary British protectorate. King Edward received him with great interest and British society took him up and lionized him.

Lewanika went home with his head turned, but with several new notions piled into it. He worked on the problem for four years before he dared anything so revolutionary as freeing the slaves. Then, even two years after Collard had died and his guiding hand had been removed, Lewanika abolished mark. Another reason for the furrows around a woman's mouth is her nervous temperament and the consequent volubility of her speech. Actors and public speakers invariably have these wrinkles in the vicinity of the mouth as an inevitable outcome of the extra effort which the perspiration of their careers brings to bear upon the facial muscles in that region.

No beneficial effect can be accomplished without the abolition of the harmful cause. It you will avoid doing the things which are detrimental to the beauty of the lower part of the face, such as making faces when you talk, you can, by the aid of careful and persistent massage with astringent lotions, prevent appearance of the marks. Apropos of astringent lotions, it should be borne in mind that in all treatments of the face three things are absolutely necessary: First, the thorough cleansing of the epidermis; secondly, the softening of the tissues, and while they are in this state the moulding takes place through massage and the application of bandages, and finally friction with astringent preparations, which cause the parts under treatment to become fixed in the desired location.

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS
The ills of childhood come swiftly and too often before a doctor can be called in or medicine obtained the mother will always safeguard her little one by keeping Baby's Own Tablets on hand. Concerning it, Mrs. Napoleon Lambert, St. Ignace, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent medicine for childhood ailments and I am well pleased with their use." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MILITARY HOSPITAL LANTERN SLIDES

An Ontario minister the other day borrowed from the Military Hospitals Commission a set of lantern slides. These slides show what goes on at the hospitals and sanatoria. That is, they show something of how our injured soldiers are being restored to health and to power for self-support, however serious their injuries may be. The minister exhibited the slides at three country churches under his charge. In returning the set he writes:

"My recording steward, who is also the postmaster and chairman of the local recruiting league, says they should be shown in every community. They meet the unrest in many families who have feared that the maimed who return will be forced to sell lead pencils or such like."

"What I should have done was to ask for them for a longer period and put them on in every available church in this district. A man with a well-prepared lecture and a few lantern slides could render a valuable service to the country, both in allaying the unrest referred to and in removing the prejudice in some families from which recruits might be secured."

The slides, with explanatory notes, may be borrowed by ministers and other responsible persons free of charge. Application should be made to the Military Hospitals Commission, 22 Victoria street, Ottawa.

night the work is carried on by enlisted men of the army—men who wear their khaki as proudly as any of the troops in the front-line trenches. The division of labor is admirable. Every device which tends to increase the efficiency of the men has been installed. Yet it is hand-made, one might also say home-made bread that is delivered to the men at the front.

Here in the long shed, the flour that has just come from Canada is stacked, and, passing through the hands of skilled workmen, is turned into bread as if by magic. A steady stream of kneaded dough, fresh leavened, is being carried to the shoot; below it is gathered up and slung on flour-sprinkled tables, out into round jumps about eight inches in diameter, each lump forming a loaf; each is carefully weighed to make all loaves of identical size. Then the loaves are shoveled into the ovens, baked to a turn, drawn out, oiled into the adjoining storeroom, where they are left to cool, when cooled the fresh bread is packed into sacks, loaded into goods vans, which wait right at the door of the building, and twelve hours from the time it has left this bakery the bread is in the hands of the quartermasters ready for distribution to the men.

Industrialism in its highest state of perfection never produced a more efficient organization than the men work at high speed. Military discipline prevails. There is no talking or sniffling. Here there is none of that atmosphere of personal irresponsibility so prevalent in industrial enterprises. I watched for a long time these men at their work, striving every nerve and muscle to do their best as efficiently as possible, and as we passed from hall to hall the command, "Bakers, attention!" brought the men instantly to the rigid position demanded by the drill regulations.

Looking over the long rows of loaves I was not a little astonished to find such a variety of sizes. Grey-haired men at work side by side with one of them; beyond, another of marriage and so on. All the goods bear British trade marks, with the exception of half a mile through this ground and silent city of foodstuffs. "La pays de Cocagne" (the land of plenty), as a Russian companion remarked to me, starting up at a high edifice made of bags of sugar.

It is a fact admitted by everyone that no army in the field is better cared for or fed than the British troops in France, but at the same time it is a current belief that no army is as extravagant. This latter opinion, which is widely held not merely in neutral countries, but even in England, would not seem to be dignifying a brief sojourn. I found everywhere signs of rigid economy.

borne out by the facts. On the contrary, as far as could be observed a regimental cook at a base told me that he had saved 8,900 rations during the last month. This does not mean that the men are stinted in any way, but the allowance of fresh meat, bread, butter, cheese, jam and tea is greater than the average man, and as the rations are packed, the raving is made without anyone noticing it, while the economy to the nation in pounds, shillings and pence is enormous.

Efficiency and economy are the two dominant factors of success in modern warfare, as in modern industry. The old spirit of "muddle" to which many claim to be sensible during the first and even the second year of the war has been swept by the board. The third, and its name hangs and confidently believed, the last year of the war is opening auspiciously. The signs of success are not to be read exclusively in the bulletins from the fighting front, nor estimated by the number of prisoners taken or miles of trenches captured, but rather by watching how smoothly, silently, irresistibly the great machine of the army, now perfected in every part, is reaching up the speed of efficiency, economy and conserving its energy and resources.

The stretched boy's parents had just moved into the country and arrangements were being made for him to attend the public school. One day he saw electricity at work there.

"What are those fellows doing?" he asked his father.

"Putting in an electric switch," was the reply.

"Well, I am going back to town at once," was the boy's astonishing comment. "I don't want a school where they are using electricity!"

Had Fourteen Fits In One Afternoon
BUT IS MADE WELL AND STRONG BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.
Mr. R. J. Thompson, of Uxbridge, Tells the Story of His Terrible Trouble and Almost Miraculous Escape.
Uxbridge, Ont., March 15.—(Special)—Mr. R. J. Thompson, living near here, had fourteen convulsions in one afternoon. The doctors did not think he could live. To-day he is well and strong. He says Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. But let him tell his own story:

"I am delighted with Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Thompson states. "I have only taken eleven boxes, and I feel like myself again."

"I was taken ill very suddenly. I ate my dinner and went to take a man home. I just got about three-quarters of a mile when I was taken with a convulsion fit. I had fourteen that afternoon and the third day I had nine more."

"The doctors said I could not live and if I did I would never be able to do anything again, as I had chronic Bright's Disease. But, thank God, I am doing my own work once again, by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Bright's Disease is the most advanced stage of kidney disease. It can be avoided if the earlier stages of kidney trouble are remedied by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Kickball for Baby.
We've football. We've basketball. It's a great game. But they're not baby games. Kickball is quite another matter. First one buys a big, light rubber ball. It may be almost as large as baby's head. Then one crochets a cover, the whole being suspended by ribbon or cord. It should reach down to the calves when baby, lying down, has his feet stuck straight up. Just watch the lively feet of the 2-year-old as he lies in his bed and kicks and kicks.

THE GRIFFON.
Almost within hearing of the roar of Niagara Falls is a little village on the line of the New York Central called La Salle, and few of the thousands who daily fly through its very doorway know that this unassuming little town was the birthplace of commerce on the Great Lakes.

In January, 1857, a French nobleman, Robert de La Salle, came to this point on the Niagara River, and at once began to build a sailing vessel, with which he hoped to carry on trade with the western Indies. On the 5th of the following August the craft was launched. She bore the name of Griffon, was of 60 tons burden and carried a crew of thirty-four men, all but one of whom were Frenchmen. The vessel was armed with seven small cannon and was an object of wonder and alarm to the neighboring Indians, who regarded it as a floating fort. On the day of the launching the Griffon set sail and in due time reached the mouth of Green Bay, Lake Michigan, where the return trip began. The voyage had been successful and with a load of fine furs they started on their homeward way, but disaster overtook them and in a severe storm the pioneer fourcered with all on board.

the horrors of some forms of idolatry, he built and maintained schools, wrote a fixed body of law, admitted the white man and his ideas, and even established female suffrage of a kind from which his neighbors across the big tides may wish to adopt something.

To the many of us who remember "Darkest Africa" as a phrase, with a connotation of cannibalism, the story of Lewanika must be of interest. He was born in 1860 in troublous times, far from Lialul, the capital city of the Barotse (or more properly Marotse). Of name he was Lobosi, and he was the twenty-second ruler of his line, which had been established in the seventeenth century and had reigned with innumerable interruptions, fatalities and restorations.

When Lobosi was born his uncle Lepopo sat on the throne as chief of the tribes in a most truly Barotsean manner. It must be said. One of his chief diversions was to chase down some of the innumerable children of subject tribes and boat them to a low island in the Zambesi near Lialul, where he fed them to the crocodiles for his own and his tribe's amusement. The bloody Lepopo was deposed and assassinated after eleven years of this kind of circus, and succeeded by another uncle of Lobosi, who was himself expelled after brief rule to make way for Lobosi, who ascended the throne in 1878, at the tender age of 17.

In the early part of his reign Lobosi exhibited all the interest in savagery that had graced his uncle so fatally. The patient Barotse stood for this kind of rule until 1884, when Lobosi brought himself to fall by torturing and murdering his own brother. He fled into exile, but returned with an army the following year and put the new ruler to rout. He reascended his throne after changing his soiled name to Lewanika.

On his re-entry into Lialul the victorious Lewanika found among his people a strange creature, a white man human serfdom in his country. Civilization had taken hold with him, a rare thing in a savage prince.

FACE WRINKLES.
Some Advice to Women Who Fear Their Appearance.

That wrinkles are bound to come even on the fairest face is not altogether so, for with care these tell-tale furrows can be prevented from making their appearance if you will take proper pains. There are, however, many women who do not know how to ward them off, and to them the following advice is recommended: Women suppose that crow's feet are the most important sign of age as far as wrinkles go, and so long as they have not these they imagine that they can hide their years. Nothing could be farther from the truth. At the base of the ear by the time you are thirty one little line will make its appearance. Every ten years after that another little tally will be marked there by the hand of time. Take good care then when smoothing your visage by massage that this little corner will not be neglected, or despite all the rest your secret will be betrayed.

Women particularly have a tendency very early in life to show lines about the mouth, which are not only a disfigurement at all times, but often become so accentuated by fatigue or illness as to completely alter the expression of the face. Most readers of these lines will probably resent the accusation that their faces are largely to the pernicious habit of chewing gum. If you do not chew gum, however, you surely indulge occasionally in caramels or bonbons of a like nature which require an unusual amount of effort in mastication. It is impossible to eat these things without making faces and frequent facial distortion is sure to leave its

Baking Bread for the Army

"Bakers, attention!"
At the front the words of command ring out in the great hall from their position, bent double over long troughs, 200 men straighten bolt upright, head erect, eyes steady, hands rigid at their sides.

"Carry on!"
Immediately 400 hands plunge in to the billowy dough and the work of kneading begins again. A man clad in a sleeveless shirt, wearing a cook's cap, passes by me, bearing a heavy load of fresh dough, which he flings down a "shoot" to the floor below.

We are inspecting briefly the process of providing bread for an army. Here, in a former factory, the bread of the British armies in the field is being made. One hundred and twenty thousand two-pound loaves of bread are each day baked in the ovens of this bakery. I was given a slice of the bread. It was crisp, appetizing and excellent. Day and what seemed to be mere boys. On inquiring, I learned that fathers and sons often enlisted together for this special service, skilled men in the trade, who, before the war, and carried on their work for the most part in individual shops.

These of us who have been taught to believe that the Englishman is a confirmed individualist, that he is incapable of organization in the German sense, must revise our notions. Those who have been led to believe that the British workman is opposed to compulsory military service and that trade union men are submitting reluctantly to army regulations must change their point of view. As a soldier here, a trade union man, said to me, "The finest union in the world is the army."

This great bakery is but a model of many other such establishments which I visited. Nearly all warehouses filled with stores for the troops in the field. The amount of goods handled in one consignment is stupendous: 50,000 tons of jam, 20,000 boxes of meat, cases of onions by the thousand, bags of sugar by the 10,000, boxes of tea by the ton, and the like. Brought in from all parts of the world direct by transport the goods are stored in the warehouses, stacked in piles so arranged that through hundreds of thousands of cases and sacks are here stored, yet almost at a glance the exact amount of the goods on hand can be counted. The supplies are so vast that no matter how great the requisition may be it can be instantly filled. I walked through long rows of goods stacked up in blocks as high as city houses. The different types of wares are arranged in squares resembling a city street. Here is a square all of sugar; close by,
