A Soldier-Courier

How Private Murphy, a Canadian soldier, in quest of a few roses with which to decorate a comrade's grave, met a sorrowing French maid and became her knight errant is told in the following pathetic incident:

"France is a beautiful land of sunshine and flowers, roses everywhere. I called upon the village cure one Sunday and said 'M. le Cure, I have come to beg a few of your roses.'"

"Sit down, monsieur, and tell me why you want my little pets, for I love them, you know," he replied. So seating myself I began to tell him of the cold mornin' in January when John Carmanan and I drove to the residence of the late Matthew McDowell and enlisted in the 133rd.

"It is for his grave, m'sieur."

"Yes, father."

"Oui, oui. Certainly, you shall have them. Marie!" he called, and a little maid came running armed with shears.

"I protested, but such a bouquet! The old cure reached for his hat. 'I will accompany you.'"

"No, no, M. le Cure, the way is long."

"Ah, yes; you will permit me. My pleasures are few now. I thought of the long vigils he had, of his years, for his hair was flowing white. Yet the sturdy old man now takes the place of five priests at the front."

"One moment," called Marie and away she ran, and I wondered why, but we were not long on our way when a score of young girls caught up to us, laden with roses, and with them Marie.

"Some time after we all reached the 14th burial plot. There are 84 graves all marked and numbered, with a cross over all, with a brass plate bearing each name—sixteen of them 133rd boys. And so I roses had enough for all of Norfolk's Own, while one tall young lady worked upon a lovely wreath, which she placed upon the cross and knelt down. We all followed her example while the old cure prayed. I remember his faltering English: 'And may these brave men, and all others who fall in the cause of liberty, justice and right, through Thy mercy, Lord, find a place of refreshment, of joy and peace, through Christ, Thy Son, our Redeemer. Amen.'"

"I rose and looked over that shell torn ground of the valley of death. It looked to me as though some giant's plough had torn it asunder, and after it an earthquake had torn great chasms here and there. The girl clung to the cross, sobbing bitterly, her comrades trying to comfort her.

"I rose and looked over that shell torn ground of the valley of death. It looked to me as though some giant's plough had torn it asunder, and after it an earthquake had torn great chasms here and there. The girl clung to the cross, sobbing bitterly, her comrades trying to comfort her.

"I went to her, speaking in French. 'I understand and appreciate your remembrance of the strange dead. No greater honor could you have shown than this. But I got no further. The maiden rose and gave me an embrace and a kiss—as is the custom of France, and something was thrust into my puttee. I stood dumbfounded, while the maidens seemed to melt away.

"The cure drew a pained from my puttee. 'See, monsieur, she has made you her knight and her avenger, for this point (very useful of close quarters in bayonet fighting) has been in her family since the Crusades. It belonged to a knight of France. And her colors, too see.' He pointed to a blue ribbon with a medal around my neck.

"I found my tongue at last. 'Monsieur le Cure, I began, 'I was her knight already, had she comprehended. Indeed, so is every Canadian soldier. The maidens were coming around again. 'We Canadian soldiers are brought up to love God and beautiful things, to respect and protect women, whosever they are. Nothing can make a Canadian soldier fight harder than the thoughts of his dear ones at home.'"

"I understand now," said the old cure, after he had explained to his friends in French, 'why Canada has conquered at Ypres, at the Somme and at Vimy Ridge. Oh, the goop fight!'"

"So we wandered home, the priest and I—the old world and the new. It was in the gloaming now, and sweet, indeed, were the clover meadows and the roses; but sweeter yet to me is the thought that the woman of France remember, even as our own."—FAMILY HERALD & WEEKLY STAR.

Was Missionary Among Indians

(GALT REPORTS)

In the death of the Rev. Henry Toller Bourne, which occurred Saturday evening, Galt has lost one of its most respected citizens and the church of England in Canada one of its most faithful and revered servants. Rev. Mr. Bourne spent many years of his life laboring in the mission field amongst the Indians of the Northwest, sharing the vicissitudes and privations incident to such a life in those early days. He was in the truest sense of the term a pioneer of the Gospel in those far away territories, often travelling hundreds of miles on snowshoes in the course of his ministrations. Not only did he deliver the message of peace and goodwill to the simple folk of those regions but he frequently acted as doctor, carpenter, and in other capacities, tending the sick, building coffins for their dead and in other necessary work. His work was indeed a work of love, he was a devoted follower of the Master.

The deceased clergyman was born at Dalwich on the outskirts of London, England, in 1833, the son of Charles Bourne. He was therefore in his 85th year. He came to Canada with his parents when five years of age. They settled in Ancaster, where they lived for some years, afterwards moving to Florence in Lambton county.

Previous to entering the ministry he was engaged for a time in Government survey work on the North shore of Georgian Bay, Manitoulin and the Northwest. He then took up his studies for the Church of England ministry at Emmanuel College, Prince Albert, Sask., and in 1878 entered the mission field amongst the Sioux at Prince Albert. Five years later he went to Alberta, travelling from 400 to 500 miles across the prairie by horse cart, and as there were no bridges in those days they were obliged to ford the rivers. He continued his work in Alberta among the Blood Indians and Peigan of the Black Foot tribe near Fort McLeod. At the latter place he built the first Indian school and conducted the first Church of England service at Lethbridge.

Deceased was married in 1880 to Jane Georgina, daughter of Dr. William Halliwell, of Toronto, who was one of the first professors of Trinity College, the marriage taking place in All Saints Church, Toronto, Dr. Chas. Mockridge officiating. Rev. Mr. Bourne and his wife returned west to Prince Albert and resumed his work among the Indians. During the Riel rebellion they were located on the Blood Reserve near McLeod. These Indians did not join in the rebellion. In 1891 deceased with his family came to Ontario and took up work amongst the settlers in the Haliburton district, remaining there about 11 years. He then retired from active work and came to Galt in 1903 where he has since resided.

During his 14 years residence here he has acted as honorary priest of Trinity Church, and on his own initiative has done much work amongst the people, irrespective of their religious proclivities.

He is survived by his widow and two sons, Charles E. H. of Weyburn, Sask., and H. Stephen of Galt, and one daughter, Miss Elsie, of Toronto. Another son, the late Lieut. Herbert H. Bourne, of the 4th C.M.R., was killed in action at the battle of Zellebeke in 1916. One sister, Mrs. Washington Boulton of Vancouver, and two brothers, Chas. E. of Jarvis, and George of Winnipeg, also survive. The funeral took place on Tuesday, Oct. 2, his late residence, at 3 o'clock, to Trinity church, thence to Trinity cemetery for interment.

Lack of Charm Cause of Divorces

Madam Sarah Bernhardt, the great French actress, in a signed article in the November issue of Harper's Bazar attributes the numerous divorces that have come into the courts of late years to lack of charm in the women concerned.

"If I stood at the threshold of life," says Mme. Bernhardt, "asking of it something with which to buy happiness, I should beg for charm. For if one has charm, she will be loved. And a woman must have love to be happy. Beauty does not matter. If a woman has charm she can secure whatever she wants, as love, success, power."

But the Divine Sarah also says that this is invaluable quality can be cultivated, and her prescription in Harpers Bazar reveals the secret.
