degrees under the hover. It should have good ventilation, no draughts, and it should be easily cleaned.

INDIVIDUAL BROODERS: So called outdoor brooders are not always satisfactory, being too small and lacking ventilation. Indoor brooders are better as the house accommodation can be made to suit conditions. Where there is too much wind for the lamp outside, try it inside the coop. The indoor electric hover gives the best of satisfaction. Cold brooders are satisfactory if not used too early and the number of chicks is limited.

EMERGENCY BROODERS: There are times when even the best managed plant is short of brooder space and emergency quarters may be arranged. Sometimes a service of general broody hen can be utilized at such a time. This, however, cannot always be depended upon and a lantern or a hot water bottle placed in a box covered over with a sacking will sometimes help one over a hard place. Small coal oil stoves and electric heaters may also be used for this purpose or one can resort to the cold brooder.

ROOM OR STOVE BROODERS: One of the best brooders for large quantities of chicks and especially when the chicks are all the same age is the room or stove brooder. This is a small stove which burns coal and is automatically regulated.

For brooding on a fairly large scale, no too early in the year, these brooder stoves are very satisfactory. They can be placed in an ordinary colony house that is used for other purposes during the rest of the year.

There are also stoves of this description which burn oil instead of coal. The oil is quite satisfactory, except for the extra cost of fuel.

PIPE BROODERS: For larger plants and earlier hatching the pipe brooder is probably the most satisfactory. It is more expensive to install, but the heat can be so regulated that the best of condition are available. There are a number of systems of pipe brooders on the market most of which are satisfactory providing the bottom heat is not too great.

CLEANLINESS ABOVE ALL THINGS
In brooding, whether natural or artificial, absolute cleanliness must be observed. Brooding quarters cannot be kept too clean and there is nothing that will kill a bunch of young chicks more quickly than lack of cleanliness.

Healthy chicks, put into clean brooders, fed judiciously should live. This year, more than ever, care should be taken that the chicks which are hatched should be given every chance. Provide them with suitable brooding quarters, feed sparingly on dry feed and keep everything scrupulously clean.
